ROSEBURG, OREGON, TUESDAY, JAN. 26, 1926.

THE LISTENERS.

Mrs. A. H. Reinhardt of Oakland, California, president of the National Association of university women, at a meeting of a branch of that organization at Atlantic City, dwelt on the idea that there are too many listeners and not enough workers. Her idea was that the women of educational organizations have become too fond of acting as an audience with some paid speaker as an entertainer.

The fine offer of $2,500,000 by Daniel Guggenheim to encourage developments of commercial aviation, will not merely promote the business progress of America, and provide possible resources of defense if war ever comes, but it is also a step toward a more complete unity in our country.

Not merely did the poet Congreve remark that "music hath power to charm the savage beast," but it is claimed now that it keeps the young people from going wrong. At the meeting of the Missouri-Kansas Bandmen's association recently, it was declared by a music director that out of 1000 boys who had played in his bands, not one had ever been in serious trouble.

The super road district formation of the Umpqua road improvement district—has carried by a big majority. This is a real step forward and means a great era of progress in the way of substantial road building.

It will soon be broccoli time in Douglas county—with a bumper crop to harvest.

GYPSIES.

The gypsy bands, when I was young, in wagons journeyed through the land; behind the wagons there were strung old horses waiting to be canned. The gypsies had much secret lore concerning horses, in that day; strange stratagems they work no more, would change a buckskin to a bay. They'd take a nag too old to chew its meagre feed of oats and corn, and dope it with some mystic brew, and lo, there was a horse reborn.

THE FERN SHIPS FLOWERS TO PORTLAND

The Fern florist shop made shipment of two hundred carnations in four colors, also a quantity of daffodils and freesias, to Portland florists yesterday. Merle Austin, proprietor of the firm, says they are shipping flowers every week to the wholesale trade at Grants Pass, Eugene and Marshfield as well as Portland. The business, which covers a quarter acre south of the city, is growing rapidly and the three greenhouses are becoming inadequate for their needs, so a new building is contemplated for this spring, as well as numerous other improvements.

BEAUTY CHATS

DARK EYELASHES

The girl with blonde hair and light eyelashes has a very simple problem: If she wants to bring out her eyes she can darken her eyelashes. She can do this in two ways, one by rubbing the lashes and eyebrows every day with a little castor oil; this will gradually darken them a trifle—a few shades—but it will help. Or she can emphasize them by using black cold cream.

The latter is not make-up. Makeup is quite different in character, it consists of oils, glycerine and waxes combined in a thick sticky paste which not only makes the lashes black or brown, but which makes them thicker by clinging to each separate hair. Makeup shows, it must, and while it does sometimes make a girl more attractive it really does not pay and it really is in bad taste in a drawing room.

But black cold cream is different. This is made (I've given the formula often and you may know it) by holding a candle under a bit of glass or china and collecting a spoonful or so of soot. This is mixed with a little white vaseline or cold cream to form a fairly thick, sticky paste. Take a little of this between thumb and forefinger, rub over the lashes (wiping off any that may get on the skin) and your lashes are dark and yet natural looking.

If your lashes are naturally dark, this same treatment will make them seem longer because it will darken them out to their very tips. The trouble with most eyelashes is that they are so fine the coloring matter does not extend to the ends, or does so in such a faint line that the hairs are really invisible. The dark cream gives them full value, makes their full length visible. Which, in turn, makes the eyes look larger and gives them a certain depth and lustre that they do not have with short, or thin lashes. It is, to use an old simile, like putting a picture in the right frame.

John G. D. The sulphur in the tonic is necessary for getting rid of the germ. It is usually included in hair tonics whenever there is any dandruff, or if there is any need for purifying scalp. Sulphur will not detract from the included in hair tonics whenever it is actually needed or not.

Jiride Who Has Much to Learn: "My Christmas plum pudding was not much of a success. Please publish the recipe which you used at your own Christmas dinner."

Answer: Here it is: "My own Plum Pudding: Buy one-half pound of beef suet and put it through your food chopper. To it add two cups of stale, fine white bread crumbs and the yolk of four eggs beaten with one and one-half cups of light brown sugar. Next stir in the juice and grated rind of one lemon, one-fourth pound of citron peel finely shaved, one cup of seedless raisins, one and one-half cups of dried currants and one and one-third cups of raw corn put through the food chopper before being measured. Dredge the mixture with one-third cup of ordinary bread flour previously mixed with one teaspoon of ground cloves and one and one-half teaspoons of ground cinnamon. Fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of four eggs and fill two greased four-ounce custard cups with the pudding. For one mold, I used an empty coffee can measuring five inches in height and four and one-half inches across both top and bottom. For the other mold I used a regular steamed- pudding mold measuring three and one-half inches across the bottom, four inches across the top, and four inches in height with the cover off. I stood these cans together in one large pot containing enough boiling water to rise and let the water continue to boil gently around them for four hours, adding more water as some of it boiled away. For Christmas dinner I served only the larger mold, as that was sufficient with all my pie. The smaller mold I re-steamed just long enough to heat through, the following day, and served with a plain hard sauce like the other.

KARASICK, YOKEL EACH GET FALL IN MATCH AT EUGENE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) EUGENE, Ore., Jan. 25.—Mike Yokel, who recently wrestled the light-heavyweight wrestling championship title of the world from the brow of Al Karasick, Russian lion, after the Russian had in turn retained the belt from Ted Thye, retained his hold on the honor last night in the main event of the Eddie wrestling card here. He retained his title because Karasick, the challenger, failed to throw him twice.

Yokel took the first fall of the match after one hour and ten minutes of the roughest wrestling seen on the local mat this season. He clamped on a step-over toe-hold which the lion could not break. Karasick came back ferociously, with a headlock attack, and threw Yokel in 42 minutes.

In the effort to obtain the final fall, neither wrestler was successful, and the match went to a draw. Men's suits cleaned and pressed, $1.50. Roseburg Cleaners, phones 472.
