TWENTY-FIVE CARS BROCCOLI MOVED TO DATE

Oregon Crop Making California Cauliflower Hard to Sell.

PRICE CUT IS FEARED

Competition From California Crop Expected to Force Down Price of Broccoli.

Roseburg broccoli is making California cauliflower hard to sell, according to a message received this morning by R. H. C. Wood, manager of the Um-Qua Valley Broccoli Growers Association, from one of his brokers in the east. The next part of the message, however, is not so encouraging, for the broker predicts that the California shippers will cut prices in order to meet competition.

"Supplies of California cauliflower are liberal," the message received by Mr. Wood from his Chicago broker states. "Superior quality and pack of Roseburg broccoli, however, is making the California crop hard to sell. They are sure to cut prices."

The cauliflower movement is well under way, according to word which Mr. Wood has received from Los Angeles. 800 cars of cauliflower have been moved since Jan. 1, according to a message received from Los Angeles, and 1200 more are expected. Conditions of the California cauliflower are reported to be good, with the crop running heavy to number 1 size, and averaging 8 to 12 heads per crate.

The local shippers are greatly encouraged by the fact that the high quality pack of the Um-Qua Valley product is being recognized. The local growers are working hard to maintain this reputation, which the messages received here indicate is adding to maintain a top price for the crop.

According to Mr. Wood, broccoli is now bringing from $1.25 to $1.45 per crate. Because of the competition from California, however, this price is not expected to continue throughout the season, Mr. Wood states.

Twenty-five carloads of broccoli had been moved from Douglas county up to this morning. Seven are being loaded today; two at Riddle and five at Roseburg. The two loaded at Riddle today were the first from the south end of the county, all of the 25 previously shipped having been sent out of Roseburg.

Eight of the 25 cars have been loaded by the Um-Qua Broccoli Growers and the rest by the Um-Qua Broccoli Exchange. The Um-Qua Broccoli Growers are loading at the Edenbower and Roseburg stations, the city loading plant being in the old Oregon Growers

LOCAL DEBATORS DEFEATED BY EUGENE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) EUGENE, Ore., Feb. 13.—Mary Klemm and Herschell Tanker, affirmative debaters of the Eugene high school team, won a two to one decision here last night from the Roseburg high school team, composed of Harland Anton and Evelyn Houser. The judges here were S. C. Wooten, instructor in the University high school; E. T. Finerty, superintendent of schools at Albany and Mrs. Charles Childs, also of Albany. The Eugene high school negative team defeated the Roseburg high affirmative in a one decision.

The judges for the debate held in this city between the Roseburg affirmatives and the Eugene negative teams were J. B. Hatch, Riddle, University of Oregon, and R. U. Moore, principal of the University high school of Eugene. The debate was preceded by a piano solo by Miss Marie Langenberg, Principal W. M. Campbell, of the local high school, presided.

CIRCUIT COURT HEARS MOTION ON SEARCH WARRANT

Judge Hamilton Declares Evidence Legally Seized Although Not Mentioned in Warrant.

Judge J. W. Hamilton today reiterated his decision in cases involving the admittance of evidence seized by officers acting under search warrants which are questioned. This question is still unsettled in the Oregon courts and several cases are pending throughout the state upon the issue.

The matter was brought before the circuit court today by Attorney Albert Abraham, attorney for Otto Muetzel, who is charged with possession of a still, and who is also appealing from a conviction in the justice court, when he was charged with possession of intoxicating liquor.

Attorney Abraham alleged that the county officers went to the Muetzel home armed with a search warrant which authorized them to hunt only for a still, mash and equipment and paraphernalia for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. The search warrant did not mention a search for intoxicating liquor.

The officers in their search took a quantity of moonshine and a keg of wine, it was alleged, and the attorney for Mr. Muetzel contended that they had no right to take the liquor, and that it was a violation of the defendant's constitutional rights for the officers to take something not mentioned in the warrant was not legally prepared decisions to support his contention. He demanded the return of the evidence seized and objected to its admission as evidence in the hearing on the appeal.

District Attorney Curson argued that the officers went to the Muetzel place in the search of a still. While engaged in that search they found the defendant to be engaged in the commission of a crime, the possession of intoxicating liquor. It is an officer's sworn duty to arrest any person found in the commission of a crime and to seize any article or articles needed as evidence, the district attorney stated. On this ground, he contended, the liquor is lawfully held and may be used as evidence.

His argument was interrupted by Judge Hamilton, who pointed out the fact that the court has already ruled on the question. In a former case the court's decision was even more pointed than the decision today. In the previous case the matter of the search warrant itself was in question. The attorneys contended that the search warrant was not legally prepared and that the evidence seized was taken without proper authority and therefore illegal. Judge Hamilton held, however, that the evidence was legal, regardless of the search warrant, and that the defendants had recourse to a civil action for damages against the officers in the event of a violation of their rights through illegal search.
