BATTLE ON FOR POSSESSION OF CITY OF PEKING

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
TIENTSIN, China, April 1.—Travelers traveling by motor from Peking say the road is filled with Mukden troops advancing on Peking, with columns marching on either side.

Fifteen trains are leaving Peking daily for Nankow and Kogan (headquarters of the Kuomintang or national army) carrying Kuomintang troops and equipment. Mukden forces are believed to be moving across country toward Nankow in an attempt to cut out the Kuomintang troops remaining in the capital.

Peking dispatches to the London Daily Mail last night said a severe battle was raging for the possession of Peking with the booming of the guns plainly audible in the capital. The Kuomintang troops are commanded by Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang. They returned to Peking recently after being defeated in the vicinity of Tientsin.

NEW OREGONIAN RADIO STATION NOW BEING USED

KGW's new 1000-watt Western Electric transmitter was placed on the air a few days ago in preliminary tests and gave an excellent account of itself under a wide variety of operating conditions. The new station is now in active operation and has been widely reported to be far superior to the 500-watt equipment previously used.

All apparatus is located on the eleventh floor of the Oregonian Tower, three floors below the site of the old station and three floors above the new studio suite and control room. Motor generator units and the pump for water cooling the giant amplifier tube are placed in an adjoining room within easy reach of the operator. The radio frequency panel, which also contains indicating and control instruments for the power supply, is located adjacent to the operating table and volume control panel so that the operator has the entire system before his eyes at all times. This arrangement insures ease and accuracy of operation and also makes it possible for one operator to control the entire system without the aid of an assistant.

The completed mechanical and electrical installation represents the highest degree of engineering perfection in design and calculation. All equipment has been built and assembled in the laboratories of the Western Electric company and embodies many new exclusive features in design. This is especially true in the low frequency amplifiers, which have been calculated to pass a frequency range of sufficient width to include any extreme in tones generally encountered in CHAPTER 16 In The Balance.

Like a tempest, the straight, small form struck flat against the pavement. The wheels humped. Terror froze through me. I closed my eyes as my heart bounding wildly in my throat, caught Perry's arm, tried to shout: "Stop! We hit it!" My voice failed.

"God, yes!" Someone in the back screamed. "Oh, God!" I turned. I saw, half imagined. Something black motionless lay in the street. We dashed on.

"Step, Perry. Oh, we've killed it!" I pounded his arm, yelled in his ear. His hands gripped the wheel; he stared forward, looking ahead, racing like a madman. "Oh stop!"

He shook me off; didn't open his lips. Shouts thundered in my ears. The four in the back, excited, half frenzied, cried out: "Go, hurry! Through the park!" Hands were laid on my shoulders, forcing me to the rear, holding me. I swung them off furiously, threw myself against Perry, grabbed the wheel, screaming at him to stop. We fought, tore at each other's hands. "Stop, Perry! Stop!" I begged, my voice weakening. "Quit, quit it!" he cursed, never once taking his eyes from the road. I kept hammering and fighting.

The sanity returned. Cold, shaking with a livid fear, I stopped down, pulled open the door, flung myself out. "Come back, Perry—oh, won't you?"

A second only I stood there. Ashton scrambled over the seat, whanged the door and pushed me. The car whizzed, veered angrily. I was alone.

I looked after the car, tears of burning rage scalding my eyes. Then I walked swiftly to the sidewalk, kept close to the houses, hurried blindly, talking to myself: "What am I going to do? What shall I say? Oh, Lord, suppose it is dead? What shall I do now?"

And turning back every few steps to see if they might be stopping, if only they, too, were coming, rushing on again and pausing, never once daring to look in the middle of the street, where I found that terrible, motionless, black heap was lying.

It was clear daylight, a soft, yellow glow flushing the trees bordering the park. Not a soul passed me.

Abruptly walked into the middle of the road, clenching my hands together, forced myself to look. A block in the distance I saw the dark, huddled shadow, quiet as a black stain on the street. I kept looking, unable to move.

"Must be, I must go. Harry, hurry! I don't know what I'm saying, but I looked about frantically to see if anyone were watching me. A man turned at the corner. Swiftly, with a brief, hellish air, I hurried past him.

As soon as he was gone, I began to run in a fever now to reach the spot.

In a panic I stopped. A policeman, walking leisurely, spied the body. He was running to it.

"But I must go on. I must see. I told myself, and I too, began to run.

"Hey there!" he saw me. "Lend a hand." He was stooping over. I walked to him, surprised at the quietness of my voice.

"What has happened? Ah, is it dead?" A little boy.

"He's dead!" he said. "Lend a hand." He was stooping over. I walked to him, surprised at the quietness of my voice.

"What's up?" he asked. "Lend a hand." He was stooping over. I walked to him, surprised at the quietness of my voice.

mouth, large, impulsive; a humorous, freckled nose—the face of a little chap of twelve.

A well-dressed youngster, clean, fine looking, that was he doing on the streets at half-past four in the morning? Where was he going? Did his parents know?

With a shot of anguish I thought of the mother. Who might she be? When she saw, what would she say? Would she know that I had done this?

And if the boy were dead? I began to shake. The head in my lap quivered. I wanted to cover the face, to hide from it. I didn't dare.

Then I began wondering crazily about Perry. Where were they now? Would they come back? Then of the moment when the wheel struck and the body dropped to the street.

I tried to feel if the heart was beating. "He is dead!" I said aloud, pressing my hands to keep them from knocking so fiercely.

The policeman glanced back: "No, there's a chance." We reached the hospital.

"I'll take your name, lady," the policeman said. "Just a matter of form."

"Gail Sherman," I answered. "I might have left. But then I followed him into the building."

"I'd like to know the child's name," I explained. "I'll wait. Perhaps I can do something for him."

I was left in the waiting room. Nurses passed in the hall. No one paid the slightest attention to me. I walked back and forth. I tried to read, to sit still. A dozen times I went to the door, intending to ask. Fear pulled me back.

A nurse passed just as I hesitated. "Can I do something," she asked pleasantly.

"I came in with the boy who was run over. Do you know?" "Yes, he is in the operating room now. We have sent for the mother."

"Oh, she is coming?" Alarm chilled me. I bit my lips. "How terrible. But he will live!" She shook her head: "I don't know."

She was going. I would be left alone again. I touched her arm, detained her. I remembered what I wished to know: "What is the little fellow's name? I'd like to follow the case."

"David Matthew." There was a hurried step in the corridor. The nurse turned. "There's the mother, now, I suppose. She will have to wait. Too bad."

Unable to move, I looked after her. A tall, magnificent woman, coming toward us, put out her hands. I heard her voice. Sobbing broke in my throat. She said only two words to me: "Come in."

And turning back every few steps to see if they might be stopping, if only they, too, were coming, rushing on again and pausing, never once daring to look in the middle of the street, where I found that terrible, motionless, black heap was lying.

Says His Prescription Has Powerful Influence Over Rheumatism
Mr. James H. Allen, of 26 Forbes St., Rochester, N. Y., suffered years with rheumatism. Many times this terrible disease left him helpless and unable to work.

He finally decided, after years of ceaseless study, that no one can be free from rheumatism until the accumulated uric acid deposits, were dissolved in the joints and muscles and expelled from the body.

With this idea in mind he consulted physicians, made experiments and finally compounded a prescription that quickly and completely banished every sign and symptom of rheumatism from his system.

He finally gave his discovery, which he called Allen's, to others who took it, with what might be said, the collector's office of his years of urging he decided to let sufferers everywhere know about his discovery through the newspaper. He has therefore instructed Nathan Fullerton and druggists to call quickly and completely banished every sign and symptom of rheumatism from his system.

He will gladly return your money without comment.

SINKING VESSEL SENDS OUT S. O. S.
(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
NEW YORK, March 31.—The independent Wireless Telegraph company's station at East Moriches, N. Y., today picked up an SOS call from the British freighter Latham, from Newport News to Ipswich, England, saying she was in distress about 600 miles southeast of Halifax. The liner Mauretania is rushing to her assistance.

The wireless said that the freighter was nearly on her beam and all her life boats had been carried away. Water was in her bunkers and was steadily gaining in the hold. She left Newport News on March 25.

REDSPOOT FISHING BOAT DESTROYED BY FIRE.
(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
MAHESFIELD, April 1.—A salmon fishing boat valued at between $1000 and $2000 and owned by Ed Patterson burned at Redspoot at 1 o'clock this morning. It was reported by D. L. Buckhorn, who returned from Redspoot this morning. The origin of the fire was not known, and while holes were chopped in the sides of the craft to let water in, so that it would not all burn the fire was discovered too late to save any part of the boat. A huge blaze resulted which lit up a large area. It was said.

AUTO KNOCKS STAGE OFF HIGHWAY; NINE PERSONS ARE HURT

SAN JOSE, Cal., April 1.—Nine persons were injured, five seriously, when a Santa Cruz-bound auto stage plucked off the Santa Cruz highway last night and rolled down a precipitous sixty-foot embankment after a collision with an automobile driven by Joe Roubal, San Francisco, who was coming in the opposite direction.

The bus was driven by R. A. Evans of Santa Cruz. It was necessary to stretch a rope from the highway down into the canyon to convey Evans and his eight passengers to the road.

TAX REFUND DUE MANY CIGAR AND AUTO DEALERS
PORTLAND, Oregon, April 1, 1926. "Under the Revenue Act of 1926, refunds were entitled to automobile dealers and cigar dealers, in connection with the reductions made in the tax on pleasure automobiles and cigars," said Clyde G. Huntley, collector of internal revenue, today.

To secure these refunds, it is necessary that the dealers in both automobiles and cigars take inventories of their stock for sale as of midnight, March 28, 1926. These inventories must be verified and certified to by a deputy collector of internal revenue before they will be considered in connection with the refund of tax, and such certification must be done on the premises of the taxpayer claiming the refund.

"My office has endeavored to place the inventory blanks in the hands of all dealers entitled to the refunds, but it is found that a large number of the dealers have failed to notify this office that their inventories were ready for certification."

All dealers who have inventories ready for certification must notify the collector's office at once, as it is his invention to have deputy collectors cover the entire state of Oregon in an endeavor to complete this work as soon as possible.

If the dealer does not send in a request for verification of his inventory to the collector's office it is quite possible that his refund may not receive attention, for when the deputy collector calls at the various towns he will only check such dealers as have filed their requests.

I will not be responsible for any bills contracted by anyone but myself after this date, Roseburg, Oregon, March 2, 1926.

FROST DANGER REPORTED SERIOUS AT WALLA WALLA
WALLA WALLA, Wash., April 1.—Danger from frost damage is extremely serious here, owing to the advanced stage of the cherry and peach blooms. Just one cold night would do incalculable damage, according to H. A. Rathbone, U. S. meteorologist, stationed here to issue frost warnings. During the past week he has been erecting his frost stations.

His superior, Floyd D. Young, of Pomona, Calif., originator of the frost warning service and in charge of eight stations, accompanied Mr. Rathbone from the south where warnings were given to the citrus growers. In speaking before the chamber of commerce last week, he said that the loss from frost throughout the country was conservatively estimated at $96,000,000 yearly. With the establishment of frost warning stations, improvements in heating and correction of the earlier variation in thermometers, the frost damage is being greatly reduced.

Saving the crop is just as important to the people of the district as it is to the growers themselves. Mr. Young declared. Loss of the crop hurts business materially. While last year the growers contributed toward paying for the frost service half of which cost is absorbed by the weather bureau, this year, it will be paid for by Walla Walla and Umatilla counties. The county commissioners included the necessary amount in the budget last year.

A sizzling hot band has been secured for the opening of Rainbow Gardens—Watch for the date—it's soon.

PRISONER REVEALS ONE WAY OF OBTAINING PRIVATE ROOM
PRESSBURG, Hungary, April 1.—When the police arrested the former Romanian deputy, Theodor Baracque, for embezzlement, they found that they had their hands full in the truest sense of the term.

The prisoner's proportions and avoidpools were so generous that when he was to be weighed, according to the prevailing custom for prisoners held on remand, the scales were promptly smashed.

Not a single cell door proved large enough to admit a person of his dimensions.

As it was not deemed advisable to fasten the prisoner to a tree out-of-doors, or to confine him in the prison garage, the warden graciously offered to have a space in his private apartment partitioned off for the defendant's internment until he should be brought up for trial.
