PORTLAND MAY BAN KNUCKLE HEADLOCK OF BILLY EDWARDS

PORTLAND, Ore., April 9.—A protest against the "chiropractic headlock" as used in wrestling matches by "Billy" Edwards of Kansas City, was filed with the city council today by Dr. Daniel Meyers, Portland physician.

Declaring that the physical effect of the hold may be dangerous and far reaching, causing mental trouble and perhaps blindness, Dr. Meyers announced that unless the promoters of the wrestling bouts voluntarily bar the hold, he would seek an injunction to prevent Edwards appearing in wrestling bouts in Portland.

The hold is not a hold but a punishment, he says. Meyers claims that it is not a test of strength. It merely paralyzes the victim until his brain refuses to act. The pain of it, he says, is terrible.

Commissioners Bigelow, Mann and Barbour expressed themselves as favoring legislation which will bar the hold if the council has jurisdiction. The matter was referred to Mayor Baker who will investigate and report what steps the council may take.

FRANK NORTON TO BUY CANNERY PLANT AT SUTHERLIN

Negotiations which have been pending for several weeks, and which were practically concluded on Wednesday of this week, assures for Sutherland one of the largest and most complete fruit packing houses in the state, says the Sutherland Sun. The deal has to do with the purchase of the local plant of the Oregon Growers Association, and the Frank J. Norton Company are to take over the property.

The plant consists of three buildings, the main building being 60x80 feet, three stories high; a prune drier 60x80 feet, two stories high and a boiler room at the southwest corner of the main building. The main building is not only equipped for packing apples, pears and green prunes, but also has a complete outfit for canning fruits of all kinds; it is also equipped for processing, sorting and packing dried prunes. Additional equipment for handling fruit is to be added to the existing department, two large automatic steel cookers having already been received at the plant.

Mr. Norton stated yesterday that plans now under consideration contemplate a 150x200 foot addition on the south side of the main building, abutting the Southern Pacific Co's spur track. It is expected to begin active canning operations in June and loganberries will be the first crop handled.

After some details in connection with the purchase of the property are completed, a corporation will be formed and $25,000 preferred stock sold. The com-

CHAPTER 24

The breach.
She was terrified at my threat; as frightened as I, myself, was. It was rather absurd. I would leave home! Where would I go? What would I do? Why should I? They owed something to me. Because I was her child, did she have all the rights and I none.

Claudia invited her guests, then slashing ahead with her preparations. I heard of it from Mary Cranston. Perhaps I should have phoned. But she had my answer. I did nothing.

My interest in David Matthews was different. I didn't know what settlement Perry had made. I feared now that he was clear of it and the whole matter hushed up. He would waive responsibility. No one really knew his guilt. He was safe. I was determined to prevent this.

I went to the hospital and saw the boy propped with pillows, the drawn child lips a little relaxed, but the eyes often barred with suffering. The mother sat in her calm, noble beauty reading to him, lifting him in her strong young arms, smoothing the covers, solving puzzles. She never weari-

This was my opening. She clasped my hand and I felt the warm, rousing vitality that had drawn me to her that first night. She was instinct with magnetism. I think it was an intense curiosity that brought me to the hospital every day. Alice Matthews was so superbly wholesome. I wondered about her, her husband, her opinions. Had she been in love? Was her marriage happy? What made her so clean and free and noble looking? I longed to talk to her. There was a sheltering kindness in her, and I was lonely.

"Isn't it a little soon to take him home?"

"No, the doctors say I may. It will be pleasant." She paused a moment, walking into the hall with me. "I have wanted to speak to you, Miss Sherman," she said, with a touch of reserve. "You have paid the hospital bills. I do not wish it."

"No, I have not." My statement startled me. My mother had not told me this. "They are paid in your name."

"Then mother did it. She said nothing to me. Have you traced the driver of the car, Mrs. Matthews?" I asked suddenly, determined to know from her directly what settlement had been made.

Her skin was a clear olive, with no stain of color. Now it flashed vividly.

"I have not wished to," she said simply, her glance dropping from mine. I thought I saw disappointment in her face. She knew.

"Well, you should!" I said impetuously. "The bills ought to be paid. Pardon me, Mrs. Matthews, has no attempt been made to compensate you for your loss of time or in any way to make up for David's suffering?"

"Some things can not be atoned, Miss Sherman."

"I know that. But there can at least be a compensation."

She looked straight into my eyes and, still holding my hand, said quietly:

"I have thought of this and I have thought of other things." She laughed, but there was little bitterness in it. "The time for action was in the beginning. I had no heart for it. Do you think it would do any good now, Miss Sherman? It has been so completely hushed."

"It would do good."

"No," I began to flinch under her steady gaze. "No, under the circumstances, Miss Sherman, I am defenseless."

Hot with shame, I drove home. The moment I reached the house I would see my mother. A month had passed since the night of the accident. Mrs. Matthews had been too fine—too absorbed—in considering money. Now it was too late.

"Is mother home?" I asked the butler.

She was in the drawing room, heard me, sent Rosalie for me. Claudia Barton was having tea with her.

"You're home early, dear," mother said anxiously.

"Fine enough, Gail." Claudia said abruptly. "Why haven't you phoned me? I wanted to talk to you about the favors for the dinner."

"There was no reason to phone, Claudia." My voice came with difficulty. "I am not going to the dinner. Perry and I are no longer engaged."

Claudia's long eyes half closed, her lips curled.

"Do you suppose, Gail," she said with inclusive slowness, "that we shall permit this trifling with our name? You take a great deal on yourself, young lady! I wonder if you have considered the consequences of this break?"

It was as though she had slapped me on both sides of the face.

"I have, Claudia. Consequences are of no interest to me."

"These will be! I'm sorry, Mrs. Sherman. I counted on you to put a stop to this childish obstinacy. She will get over it when it is too late. I will give her until tomorrow night. Then the dinner will be called off. And that WILL end it!"

She walked swiftly to the door, her large well-set head tossed back.

SUTHERLIN TO CONSTRUCT HUGE WATER RESERVOIR

The regular meeting of the city council Monday night proved an unusually busy session, a number of important matters coming before the council for consideration and disposal, the most important being a reduction in the Sutherland water rate to approximately half the present price and ordering a reservoir of 400,000 gallons capacity constructed at the old stone quarry on the north side of town.

The new water rate will give consumers a price of $2.00 for 10,000 gallons instead of $3.30 as heretofore.

After some discussion of the matter, the council voted unanimously to construct a reservoir of 400,000 gallons capacity at the old stone quarry on the hill on the north side of town. Careful estimates on the work necessary to transform this stone quarry into a large reservoir, the cost being between $300 and $400. The place will be thoroughly cleaned of broken rock, leaves and dead limbs from trees, and a concrete and rock retaining wall six feet high and thirty feet in length, four feet wide at the bottom and two feet wide at the top will be built on the south side of the reservoir.

When completed the reservoir will occupy a space 82x190 feet and will have a depth of about fifteen feet of water. Water from the main pipeline will flow constantly into the reservoir through a four-inch steel pipe extending up from the center. The overflow will be carried to Sutherland creek by means of a ditch on the east side of the reservoir.

The reservoir will be enclosed with a heavy wire fence, with barbed wire extending around the top. The construction work will be under the immediate supervision of City Marshal Clyde Holman, who already has a force of men on the job.

The matter of reduction in city water rates which has been under discussion by citizens for some time, was taken up by the council following the disposal of the reservoir question. All the members of the council were in favor of a reduction in rates the only question being as to how far they should go in the matter and play safe on revenue to meet interest on bonds.

The argument was advanced that as the city now had plenty of water at its disposal, a lower rate would probably encourage a more liberal use of it by consumers, and that receipts would undoubtedly show a substantial increase rather than a decrease by reason of the reduction of rates. Members of the council pointed out that many citizens had permitted their lawns to die out and their gardens to wither during the past season because of the high cost of water—and also its frequent shortage. With plenty of water and a rate within the reach of all, it was argued that a more generous use should follow.

The minimum rate is the same as in the old schedule. In the new schedule consumers will receive 3000 gallons of water for $1.50 instead of 2500 gallons for $1.00. 10,000 gallons for $2.00 instead of $3.30, as provided in the old rate. Ten cents per thousand gallons will be charged on all water used over 10,000 gallons.

EFFECTIVE LAW ENFORCEMENT IS URGED BY UPTON

Candidate for Governor
Declares Change Needed
in Handling Situation in the State.

Jay H. Upton, Republican candidate for Governor, stopped in Roseburg last night on his way to Coos Bay and Reedsport, where he expects to spend several days working in the interest of his candidacy. He arrived late yesterday afternoon, and was the guest of the S. P. trainmen at their 8 o'clock luncheon last night, and at the meeting which followed. After spending the night here he departed early this morning for Marshfield.

"The people of Oregon are not going to be fooled any longer by empty promises of law enforcement," Mr. Upton declared in discussing the political situation. "Sporadic raids into local communities where a few bootleggers are arrested and imprisoned and then moved on to another for the same purpose, while sensational and diverting, is not real enforcement."

"There must be cooperation between the state and local officers and the state officers must assist and not supplant the local officers. The disgrace of Oregon has been the ex-kill bird, convicts, bootleggers and the stool pigeons that have been appointed in order to intimidate and highjack violators of law who have been encouraged to aid bribery to their bootlegging operations. I will only appoint honest, capable officers to enforce the laws and to cooperate with local officers. Any officer who violates the rights of private citizens or who himself breaks the law will be discharged at once."

"I cannot conceive how honest and capable citizens of this state can believe in the promises made by Governor Pierce for law enforcement where he on the one hand urges greater punishments and then releases the criminals from imprisonment almost as fast as they are incarcerated. He has pardoned more than 200 men and women who have been sentenced to jail or the penitentiary for illicit dealings in liquor. Practically no release for each day he has spent in his office since he was Governor. What encouragement is there for sheriffs and district attorneys to enforce the law when the Governor turns them out as he does? There will be no pardons granted by me for political favors."

ALLEGED IMMORAL PLAY BEING AIRED IN CROWDED COURT

LOS ANGELES, April 10.—"Deeds Under the Elms," regardless of its box office pulling power, "played" to a court room here yesterday in which the SRO sign would have been appropriate. Twenty-five members of the cast are on trial on the charge that they took part in an immoral production.

ing the fate of having to listen to the play, "word by word and line by line," according to the announcement of defense attorneys.

The defense today casting about for parallel circumstances in an effort to prove that "Deeds," etc., is chemically pure, tried to introduce the song of Solomon and then the entire Bible in evidence, but the court ruled otherwise.

A police officer and a stage electrician went through a fine tooth combing at the hands of defense counsel as to the merits and morals of some of Shakespeare's and Ibsen's works until finally the police officer, Eugene Sweetland, added that "police men don't use their mental faculties while on duty."

Predictions are freely made that the play will have at least a week's run in Judge William Frederickson's department of the municipal court.

A gymnasium and stage form part of the plans.

The church will cost approximately $100,000, according to plans.

FORMER ROSEBURG MAN ARRESTED AT ASHLAND FRIDAY

ASHLAND, April 10.—G. E. Roger, a farm hand who has been working near Roseburg was arrested shortly before noon today by Chief of Police McNabb for operating an automobile with 1925 license plates. The battered old Ford which he was driving had old plates which had been repainted. Somebody had made a good job of changing the "1925" to "1926", and the counterfeit plate might have escaped notice if the driver had kept traveling.

The driver said he had owned the car since last October, but could not account for the presence of the spurious license plates.

Roger was taken before Police Judge Frost this afternoon where he was found guilty of operating with illegal plates. He was fined $50 and sentenced to 20 days in the county jail.

DUSTED SUPT. OF SCHOOLS HINTS AT FIGHT IN COURTS

(Associated Press Local Wire.)

LA GRANDE, Ore., April 10.—James Eaman, superintendent of the Walla Walla, Oregon, schools, has been discharged by the Walla Walla school board and the position declared vacant. The vote was two to one against his retention. The action reversed a vote of retention which followed the presentation of a petition from citizens asking Eaman's dismissal.

"From my point of view it seems to me that the board has decided to pay two superintendents," Mr. Eaman said, adding that his contract is legal and binding.
