BROCCOLI SEED BEDS: (By County Agent R. W. Cooney) The time of year has arrived, when broccoli growers will turn their attention to the location and preparation of their broccoli seed beds. Since the start of any vegetable crop is the seed it is assumed that each grower has provided broccoli seed of unquestioned merit.

The next step will be selection and preparation of the seed beds. This operation while important, is well known to the majority of growers and for that purpose of this article needs no direction. It is desired, however, to call the attention of the growers to the need of better systems of fertilizing these seed beds. Nine growers out of ten have never made it a practice to use any type of fertilizer. Dependence has been placed for a good crop of plants upon the natural fertility of the soil. Observation of hundreds of seed beds the past three years lead the County Agent to conduct some demonstrations in which organic and inorganic fertilizers were used. Every demonstration conducted gave ample proof that liberal application of certain fertilizers would return several hundred percent profit in quality and number of plants on a given plot of ground.

In view of our past experience as shown by demonstrations we strongly advise the use of some reliable fertilizer. It is frankly admitted that any set fertilizer formula would not give the same results upon any wide range of soil types. Our recommendations, then, will cover what we believe average soil conditions.

Formula No. 1— 200 pounds steamed bone meal per acre.

Formula No. 2— 100 pounds sulphate of ammonia, 125 pounds triple acid phosphate.

Formula No. 3— 200 pounds blood meal, 150 pounds triple acid phosphate.

Formula No. 4— Balance fertilizer 4-8-2.

All fertilizers should be sown as a top dressing and thoroughly worked into the soil before drilling the seed. Spike barrow spring tooth cultivator or disc harrow may be the implement used. Formula No. 2 is a quick action fertilizer and need not be applied only a short time before seeding. Other formulas are slower in action and therefore need to be worked into the soil one or two weeks before seeding.

One acre of seed bed represents a considerable outlay of money. Every grower is interested in maximum results. Reasonable application of fertilizers will be a big boost towards this goal.
