Lost Goose Returned
The flock here pastured high over the Columbia—save for a single bird that must have passed above the gunner ere he fired. This goose drove to the west above and along the river, and at every wing stroke the distance between bird and flock widened.

They faded from sight. The call of the lost goose, the voice of the flock, merged gradually into silence, shading away until one heard only the ceaseless whisper of the current.

Presently, far to the west, the call came faintly forth again and grew in volume. The lost goose was described as a frantic hurrying speck, lacking lither and thither. His cry was rapidly repeated, which is not the habit of Canada, and beyond all misunderstanding it was not only plaintive, but perturbed.

At a quarter mile in the air he drove past, seeking far to eastward, only to retrace his course, constantly calling, and to retrace it time and again.

At a quarter-mile in the air he drove past, seeking far to eastward, only to retrace his course, constantly calling, and to retrace it time and again.

He heard then a full minute before we did, for on the instant his cry was joyous and confident and his flight to the east took a determined and resolute direction.

And then, distant as a dream, faint and far, we caught the bugles of the returning flock. Were they, too, searching? But surely there was elation in their quickened clamor when the lost one literally hurried himself among them, and took his rightful place. They arose to the flight, and the flock took shape, and southward they drifted, southward. Wild geese!

Robert Perkins, of Eugene, visited with friends in this city over the week end.

Hundreds have put their O. K. on classified columns. They are the starting point of many people's success and prosperity.

When Two Strong Men Stand Face to Face

True men recognize and respect one another, even through the mists of enmity. It is in warfare that we find the most striking illustration of that fact. Sir Frank Benson tells a delightful story of the sort which is quoted in Joseph H. Oldham's "Christianity and the Race Problem."

A British officer had been sent forward in some fighting with the Zulus, leading a contingent of men. The Zulus sent out a messenger of peace. By an unhappy blunder the British outpost shot him. The officer was greatly distressed. So he handed over the contingent to the second in command and walked straight out, unarmed, to the Zulu lines. He was led to the chief.

"I have come," he said, "to give myself up because we shot your peace messenger by mistake. It is a thing brave warriors never do. I am very sorry. To make amends I place my life in your hands; do what you will."

The Zulu warrior chief was silent for a moment. Then he said: "You are a man, and your people are men and the sons of men; we, too, are men. We will make peace."

Separation of Latin and Greek Churches

Apart from the theological discussions, such as those arising from the addition of the words, "and the Son," in the creed, the separation of the Latin and Greek churches may be traced to the founding of Constantinople and the political division of the Roman empire. Ignatius, patriarch of Constantinople, had been deposed, and was succeeded by Photius, who summoned a Council of the East in 879, and passed a sentence of excommunication on the bishop of Rome. The churches became reunited toward the end of the Ninth century and remained so until the middle of the Eleventh century, when, in 1054, Michael Cerularius, patriarch of the East, renewed the condemnation of the Latin church, which in turn excommunicated by Pope Leo IX. Efforts toward reunion were made from time to time, and at Ferrara (1439) the Greek prelates signed a decree of union, but were forced by the people and clergy to repudiate it. Since then the two communions have remained separate.

Wood for Newspaper

Since the customary units of wood measurement—cord, log measure or lumber scale—do not represent an exact quantity, the cubic foot solid wood is used. Even this unit is variable as to pulp yield according to the character and rate of growth. However, taking the dry weight of spruce as 24 pounds per cubic foot, the commercial yield of 100 cubic feet would be about 2,400 pounds of mechanical pulp, or sulphite pulp, 1,030 pounds. Commercially, news print is made from a mixture of 75 per cent mechanical and 25 per cent sulphite. Consequently, a ton of newsprint would contain 1,600 pounds mechanical and 600 pounds sulphite. Then 1,600 pounds mechanical would require 642 cubic feet wood; 600 pounds sulphite would require 485 cubic feet wood; 1 ton of newsprint would require 1187 cubic feet or 2722.8 pounds oven dry spruce wood.

No Partner of the Devil

One Servais Le Roy, the illusionist, was playing in Milwaukee. He ran out of rabbits—a serious situation for any magician. Le Roy found that an old German who lived outside of the city raised rabbits. He immediately went to the farm. The rabbits were there—plenty of them—and the required number was soon bought and paid for. Le Roy was so pleased that he pulled out a wad of his personal papers and wrote out one for the farmer and his wife. The German took one look at the paper and his eye fell upon a picture of a devil. He adorned the slip of paper. Then he seized the rabbits and threw the money back in Le Roy's hands. He would have nothing to do with any transaction in which the devil was concerned.—Howard Thurston in Colliers.

Fish Marketed by Radio

Five minutes after a fish is caught in the North sea, a man sitting in a London office, 400 miles away, decides exactly where it will be eaten. All of the trawlers belonging to a big London fishing corporation are now equipped with wireless, and a report of every big catch is flashed to the London office so that marketing machinery starts working at once. Sometimes the fish are advertised in the London market before they are on the way to port. Fish that are rarely caught arrive just in time to be compared and served for special occasions for which they have been booked.

A Pessimist

Recently an Indianapolis suburban real estate dealer had been driving several miles with a man ten years his senior. When they started to get out of the car the real estate man's left knee pained him severely, and it was with difficulty that he got out.

On learning that his guest often suffered that way, he inquired for the remedy, and received the following reply: "Why, there ain't any remedy. In about ten more years they'll both be that way!"—Indianapolis News.

The Real Objection

He—And so your father objects to my calling.

She—Oh, no; what he objects to is your not having any calling.—Boston Transcript.

Journalist Scored

Anatole France said that actors have the vanity and brains of peacocks. From which it follows that they are not adept at repartee. A journalist and an actor became involved in an argument as to the intelligence of the stage craft. To support his case, the journalist quoted the statement by France. The discussion was long and heated, the actor finally accusing the journalist of lack of intelligence because the latter denied possession of brains to actors. He said: "Now I know what it means to have a peacock brain." To this the journalist retorted: "Then you must have learned through introspection."

Milk Products Old

Butter was known for at least 2,000 years before the Christian era. It was not used as food, however, but mostly as a medicine and ointment, and in some parts was employed as an illuminant for lamps. The butter was churned in wooden kegs or tubs, and was a very inferior article. Cheese has been known since the earliest times, the oldest mention of it occurring in 1400 B. C. It was used as an article of food before butter.

Difference in Law Terms

The Pathfinder Magazine thus defines the difference between adjective and substantive law: Substantive law consists of the general and fundamental principles of law. Adjective law consists of certain rules and regulations governing court procedure and the administration of the substantive law. In other words, adjective law is a set of rules by which the substantive law is executed.
