SEARING AGAIN
SEATTLE CHIEF
SEATTLE, May 28.—Mrs. Bertha K. Lande, after today outlining a sweeping program of reform, announced that Captain William H. Searing will be police chief when she becomes mayor of Seattle June 7. Searing was displaced as chief when Dr. Edwin J. Brown, whom Mrs. Lande, on a clean city platform, defeated for reelection to a third term, entered office four years ago.

MUTINY IN PORTUGAL
PARIS, May 28.—Two army divisions in Portugal have mutinied, says a Havas Agency dispatch from Lisbon. One division was stationed in northern Portugal and the other in the south.

English Common Law
The name "common law" is given to unwritten law—lex non scripta of England, in contradistinction to the written or statute law. It consists of a collection of maxims of British, Danish and Saxon extraction, to which custom and judicial decisions have given the force of law; and derives its origin, it is said, from King Alfred's code of laws, promulgated in 890 A. D., and afterwards lost. Statute law prevails over common law. The common law of the United States is based on that of England.—Exchange.

Clever Police Work Credited to Italian

For a moth to be convicted of murder seems incredible, but this actually happened. After giving a dinner party the Princess Caravella of Naples went to lie down in order to refresh herself for a dance, and later was found shot through the heart. Suspicion pointed to her husband, who was known to be of a jealous disposition, and he was arrested. The fact that the pistol was found lying near the dead woman seemed incongruous, but the husband would probably have been convicted but for the shrewdness of a Naples police officer.

He found a large moth lying on the floor by the bedside. A lighted candle had stood on the bedside table where the pistol lay, and the moth had been singed in the flame. He also found dust from the moth's wings on the trigger of the pistol, which was also proved to work with exceptional ease, whilst the pistol lay in such a position that it covered the woman's heart.

It was argued in court that the moth had burned its wings and had fallen on the table, where, writhing and fluttering, its wings had struck the trigger and the pistol had been fired. On this evidence the prince was acquitted.

Birds and Mankind of Long Association

The association between certain birds and mankind is exceedingly ancient, says the London Times. As with sheep and oxen and horses, and even more with the dog, the attempt to assign a date to the origin of our farmyard birds is foiled by the mists of antiquity.

The scanty company of farmyard species has been recruited in very different ages. The turkey could not join us until we discovered America, and probably far the oldest is the rock-pigeon. When man learned how to grow grain, the dove found a new attraction in his company.

When man became a builder in stone, he built also for the swallows and doves. The swallow finds a home today in the cowsheds that shade his ancient caves, while the house-pigeon, like the house-martin, clings to the outside of man's mimic rock faces and builds its nests on his triumphant arches and against his enthralls.

Gregorian Calendar

The present calendar was adopted in the sixteenth century, the Julian or old Roman calendar having become greatly erroneous, Luigi Lilio Ghiraldi, frequently called Aloysius Lilius, a physician, of Verona, projected a plan for amending the Julian calendar, which, after his death, was presented by his brother to Pope Gregory XIII. To carry it into execution, the Pope assigned a number of prelates and learned men. In 1577 the proposed change was adopted by all the Catholic princes, and in 1582 Gregory issued a brief abolishing the Julian calendar in all Catholic countries, and introducing in its stead the one now in use, under the name of the Gregorian or reformed calendar, or the "new style," as the other was now called the "old style." The Gregorian calendar was not adopted in England until 1752.

Italy Guards Antiques

In Italy one of the most serious crimes is the stealing or unauthorized excavation of antiquities. The government claims as its property all objects of artistic or archaeological interest over 100 years old, and permits for their exportation are obtained only rarely and with difficulty.

Rights to excavate or even to study while excavations are proceeding are rarely granted to foreign students. The other day some archaeological pickpockets who removed some ancient vases and marbles from tombs that were being excavated near Connechio were convicted in court. The leader was sentenced to seven years in prison—a punishment rare in Italy for any crime less than murder.

Pigeons Long Popular

For thousands of years pigeons have been favorite birds with the people of many countries and in many climes, and the popularity is as great today, or greater, as in any other period of which history speaks. Ramesses III loved pigeons, donated some of the finest for use in the temple of Thebes, and Pilius told in his writings of birds selling for sums that would be about $75 in money of today. He thought that price rather high, but pigeons have sold in this country within the last year for $1,300. Pigeon racing is the popular sport of Belgium.—Ohio State Journal.

Anybody gets a thrill from success

Kitchen happiness flutters out of the successes in cooking. A woman's friends call her good dishes accomplishments. To her they are delights and, when she is certain of good results every time, they become triumphs.

That is the way we feel about Fisher's Blend, because we have confidence in it and know it contains the elements of good baking results, every time. It is positively a uniform flour.

We are almost fussy about exactness, since we realize that you begin where we leave off. How may you be certain of uniform results if the flour you start with is variable?

We test our wheat for quality in the fields, again when it is harvested, again on its arrival at our mills, and finally when it is being drawn for milling. So we know our blend of wheats is right. We make a laboratory analysis of the first separation of flour in the rolls and another when Fisher's Blend Brand-Flour is a finished product. Always it must conform exactly to our formula for a perfect all-purpose flour.
