NO TRACE FOUND OF ABDUCTORS OF EVANGELIST

to share the enthusiasm displayed by the Angeles Temple congregation. District Attorney Asa Keyes, upon hearing of Mrs. McPherson's assertion that she was abducted, declared that such an occurrence was an outrage and immediately launched an investigation. Local activity in the investigation, however, is at a standstill pending the return of officers who were dispatched to Douglas to study every angle of the strange case.

The finding of the missing woman was not without its commercial features. Merle Armitage, business executive of the Los Angeles grand opera association, seeing an opportunity to theatricalize the evangelist's experience, messaged her last night offering $10,000 for her first public appearance here. He has received no reply.

New Search Begun.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., June 24.—Herman Cline, chief of detectives of the Los Angeles police department; Joe Ryan, deputy district attorney of Los Angeles, and A. H. Murchison, Douglas police sergeant, late today crossed the international line into Mexico on an attempt to trace the movements of Almee Temple McPherson, prior to her arrival yesterday at Agua Prieta, Sonora.

Simultaneously a posse headed by Sheriff McDonald of Cochise county set out across the international boundary line in a different direction. The two parties plan to meet near Niggerhead mountain in Sonora, several miles south of where the shack in which Mrs. McPherson says she was held prisoner by three kidnappers is believed to be located.

Falling in a faint while posing for a picture by movie men and photographers, Mrs. McPherson late today was taken back to the hospital from which she was released at noon. She rallied quickly, according to hospital attendants.

MENEFEE LUMBER MILL NEAR RAINIER DESTROYED BY FIRE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

LONGVIEW, Wash., June 24.—The L. Menefee Lumber company's mill and yards, located on the Columbia River, on the Oregon side, below Rainier, were destroyed by fire early today. Reports received here did not tell the cause of the fire, and the amount of the loss was not stated. The lumbering fire department crossed the Columbia River on a ferry to aid the Rainier firefighters. They confined their efforts to save the dock and a portion of the stored lumber.

Not Hard for Experts to Detect Fake Gems

Jewel forgers have become so clever that a special gem-testing institute has been established in Vienna, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, and similar studies are being carried on in this country to detect imitations.

Imitation diamonds are numerous and it is possible to make real ones in the laboratory, but the cost of the process is about $200,000 a carat, while natural ones can be purchased at from $100 to $200 a carat. Rubies can be made by laboratory methods in about six hours, and some of them are so nearly like the real stones that other tests than with the eyes are necessary to distinguish them.

While the synthetic emerald has brilliance and realistic color, it usually can be told from a genuine one with little difficulty. They are often built up in three parts, which are fastened by invisible cement. The top and the bottom part may be glass crystals cut in many facets with a thin shaving of a real emerald between them to give the color. Others may have a slight cavity between the two crystals which is filled with a green liquid. Both imitations are easily detected by submerging the stone in a certain kind of oil and holding it up to the light.

Pride of Scotland Not Alcohol Addict

Sir James Crichton Browne, a medical man, has published a post-mortem diagnosis on Robert Burns, the Scotch poet, which aims to break down the sad and sordid figure of tradition and substitute one of an Ayrshire plowboy who was "on the whole, a temperate fellow for his time," though cursed with a poor constitution, the New York Times asserts.

Sir James submits that heart disease arising out of rheumatism acquired in youth, and not drink and debauchery, as generally held, caused the poet's "unconscious suicide." He goes over the records and shows that not a single contemporary of Burns noted in him symptoms which might indicate the effect, direct or indirect, of chronic alcoholism.

The accepted legend springs apparently from the Currie biography. Now Currie, Sir James points out, figured in his day as a temperance zealot. He gathered and preserved his "Life of Burns" much information that might otherwise have passed forgotten, but the reformer won out. He seized the opportunity to point a moral, and in so doing deformed his tale.

And They Believed It

At one time biology was one of the "stiffest" courses at Washington and Lee university. Freshmen who dreaded the course were led by upper classmen to the skeleton of "Traveler," the famous gray charger that bore Gen. Robert E. Lee through the Civil war, in the university museum. There they were told that if they wrote their names on "that sacred relic of Southern biology" they would never flunk or fall in that subject. Hundreds of the freshmen believed it. As a result the skeleton of the famous charger became covered with inked and penciled names of five generations of Washington and Lee students. The white bones became black. So the authorities recently ordered the skeleton given a thorough bath and mounted high up on a balcony and locked against those who might seek to carry on the quaint old custom at the university. —Pathfinder Magazine.

The Rare Gentleman

It is no very uncommon thing in the world to meet with men of probity; there are likewise a great many men of honor to be found. Men of courage, men of sense, and men of letters are frequent; but a true gentleman is what one seldom sees. He is properly a compound of the various good qualities that embellish mankind. As the great poet animates all the different parts of learning by force of his genius and irradiates all the compass of his knowledge with his luster and brightness of his imagination; so all the great and solid perfections of life appear in the finished gentleman with a beautiful gloss and varnish; everything he says or does is accompanied with a manner, or rather a charm, that draws the attention and good will of every beholder. —Steele.

Genius Not Happiness

On the use we make of our knowledge, rather than the extent of it, depends our happiness, says Dr. H. Douglas Singer in Hygien Magazine. A feeble-minded person can be happy and relatively efficient, while genius is no preventive of unhappiness.

The quality of our brains and their capacity for acquiring knowledge differ at birth. However, for all types of men, with all qualities of brains, there is useful work and happiness to be found. If we are trained to suitable habits, and suitable activities, we may become equal in the degree of our usefulness and happiness.

Whale Long Pursued

Whale fishing is a far more ancient calling than most people know. Primitive man's first acquaintance with the creature was probably gained from stranded specimens; exactly when the first boat put to sea in pursuit of one of the monsters history does not record. But King Alfred's description of other voyagers to the White sea is an indication that the Norwegians were expert at whaling a thousand years ago. The Basques of certain Pyrenean districts carried on in the Tenth century; they were fearless hunters of the black, or Atlantic, whale.

Wood-Carved Deer

A pair of wood-carved deer, more than one hundred years old, are on exhibition at Bath, Maine. The carving is perfect down to the minutest detail, even to the ruffled hair on their backs. They are the work of an artist possessed with an abundance of patience.
