The Diamond Tragedy; or, To Be Continued

The diamonds, which the woman had sought so desperately to gain, lay in a little heap on the table. She gazed at them, covetously, as if hypnotized, then turned towards the man who had outwitted her. He laughed triumphantly.

"My lady must acknowledge defeat," he said. "A bitter pill, indeed, but so soon beaten."

"A sigh of disappointment escaped her."

"They would have meant so much to me," she murmured, "and I made my plans so carefully that failure seemed out of the question. I never thought—never dreamed—that you would take them from me."

"You're too trustful, my dear Lila," he answered. "I liked the look of those diamonds from the very beginning, and I soon discovered that you were after them, too. So I double-crossed you, that's all."

"You beast!" she put in. "Your scheming rather amused me," he went on, heedless of the interruption, "especially as I knew that you were bound to fall."

"And so!" she cried hotly, "you watched and waited, and as soon as I touched the diamonds, my dear, I put the ace on your king, which made my queen good, and put you one down doubled."—The Passing Show.

Old Ideas Revived by Experiments in Diet

Some remarkable cases of fasting have attracted attention lately, but one striking experiment in diet has met with less attention than it deserves.

This experiment was carried out by three scientists who lived for several months entirely on potatoes and vegetables, with a little margarine, and a slight addition of onion.

One of the results of this experiment is that science is now beginning to believe that there may be something in the old idea that potato water is a remedy for gout. The potato does appear to have considerable virtues where this disease is concerned.

Another result is that it is now claimed that the diet of the peasant in some parts of Europe, in which meat figures very rarely, is healthier as well as cheaper than more elaborate fare.

Sir Rowland Hill, founder of the penny post, was very keen on dieting experiments. He lived for many periods of three days each on not more than two articles, such as boiled green peas and salt, and damson pie and sugar.

Wood for Newspaper

Since the customary units of wood measurement—cord, log measure or lumber scale—do not represent an exact quantity, the cubic foot solid of wood is used. Even this unit is variable as to pulp yield according to the character of the wood as to the species and rate of growth.

However, taking the dry weight of spruce as 24 pounds per cubic foot, the commercial yield of 100 cubic feet would be about 2,300 pounds of mechanical pulp and of sulphite pulp, 1,030 pounds. Commercially, newspaper is made from a mixture of 75 per cent mechanical and 25 per cent sulphite pulp.

Generally, a ton of newspaper would contain 1,500 pounds of mechanical and 500 pounds of sulphite. Then 1,500 pounds of mechanical would require 66.2 cubic feet wood; 500 pounds sulphite would require 48.5 cubic feet wood; and ton newspaper would require 113.7 cubic feet or 2,728 pounds oven-dry "spoke" wood.

Original "Mausoleum"

The term "mausoleum," applied in modern times to a tomb of considerable architectural pretension, was derived from the tomb of Mausolus, a king of Caria, near the Aegean sea. When he died in 353 B. C., Artemisia, his widow, erected at Halicarnassus one of the most magnificent tombs the world has ever seen.

Artemisia died before the tomb was completed, but the work was carried on by the most famous sculptors of ancient times, and became known as one of the wonders of the world.—Kansas City Star.

Famous Old Statue

The "Victory of Samothrace" can be dated at about the end of the fourth century. It was found in 1863, broken into a multitude of fragments which have been carefully united. "There are," says F. B. Tarbell, "no modern pieces except in the wings. The statue stood on a pedestal having the form of a ship's prow, the principal parts of which were formed by an Australian expedition to Samothrace in 1875. These fragments were subsequently conveyed to the Louvre, and the Victory now stands on her original pedestal."

Disappointed

A Yankee from New England was lounging on a park bench in London when a great excitement arose. People rushed toward the street, falling over each other in their haste to get there. "What's it all about?" asked the Yankee, starting to get up.

"The king is coming!" "Thunderation!" said the Yankee, setting back on the bench. "I thought it was a fire."—Country Gentleman.

Self-Sufficient

She was three years old and very independent, objecting to being helped in any way. One morning she protested against having her hair brushed, saying, "I brush my own hair. And so it went on during the stages of dressing, until finally her mother exclaimed, "Edna, if you don't behave I'll spank you!"

Immediately came the retort from Edna: "I spank myself!"

Monotony of Waiting Too Much for Billy

It is hard for grownups to see things from a child's point of view, and to realize that our ideas of politeness must sometimes seem strange to him! The Woman had this fact brought to her notice the other day.

She was visiting a friend who has a small son. Billy had been sitting next his mother when the Woman entered the room, but at his mother's "run and play, dear," he retired to a corner with books and blocks. Presently, however, he returned and slipped into his little chair between the two ladies.

The grownups continued to talk, and Billy, holding a book in his fat little hands, looked eagerly from one to the other in the hope that a pause in the conversation would give him a chance. Failing this, he presently laid a hand on the Woman's arm, "Excuse me," he said softly.

"Certainly, dear," replied the Woman, "what is it?"

"Nothing; I just wanted to speak to my mother a minute," answered Billy, and turning to her he spoke quickly, before the stream of adult conversation should start again. "I found that story about the kitten! You keep it, and we can read it when this lady has to go."—New York World.

Patriotic Action of Foreign-Born Citizens

Through the efforts of a naturalized Swiss, a naturalized German and a naturalized Frenchman, the United States government once was saved from bankruptcy, writes Sydney Greenbush in Asia Magazine. It was during the War of 1812, a war so unpopular in many quarters that the government's attempt to negotiate a loan of $10,000,000 for its conduct brought subscriptions of less than $8,000,000. New England refused to extend any aid, and some persons thought that the colonies were going back to the Mother country.

The treasury was almost at the end of its rope, lacking both funds and credit, when John Jacob Astor, a native German, and Stephen Girard, a Frenchman, the two richest men in America, came to the rescue and, through Secretary Albert Gallatin of Madison's cabinet, a Swiss, took the remaining $10,000,000. Astor subscribed for $2,000,000, and Girard, through his bank, became responsible for $8,000,000.

Sign Told the Truth

The blind mendicant, led by a dog on a string, has not been so much in evidence during the last few years, but the other day one of the clan took up a position on Grand avenue near Broad street.

He was fully equipped up to the old-time standard. His clothes were ragged, his tin cup was battered and the dog put on an dull and sleepy appearance as his master fastened about the dog's neck was a placard bearing the appeal: "Please help the blind."

A man in passing attempted to toss a quarter into the cup, but it struck the edge and rolled out over the pavement. The "blind" man promptly made a dive for it and as his hand closed over the coin he surprised business man who had given it explained: "What do you mean? You're an old faker and not blind a bit."

"Never said I was, mister," was the blind reply. "It's the dog that's blind."—Philadelphia Record.

Bank Teller Wasn't Fooled

"They used to try all sorts of tricks on us in the old days," said a bank teller of 50 years ago. "I remember that a lady and an important little fellow came in one day and said: 'Friend of mine has just given me $50 in small bills. Let me have a $50 for them.' It is possible that I might have thrown the $50 to him after flipping over the end of the neat package with its white binder. But I didn't."

I unplanned it and went through the bill, bill by bill. They were not neatly arranged under the binder. Some were upside down and when I went through them I found one of the fives was half there, and two of the twos were out in two and made to do duty at both ends.

"Sny, give me those bills," said the patron. "I'll find that fellow and spank him up." And he grabbed the bills and rushed away at a great rate.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Not Appreciated

"My dear fellow," said John Clayton, "I wrote to a man who had sent me an admirable picnic and said, 'My dear sir, I have read your play. Oh my very dear sir! Yours truly, John Clayton.'"

"I told this story on many occasions with great success. At last I told it to one who did not laugh. He was my secretary. It seemed to me hard, indeed, that one's own secretary should not laugh at one's funny stories. It appeared to me that he had mistaken his vocation, and I said in a tone of some irritation, 'You don't seem to think that funny.' Said he, 'No, I don't. It was to me, Mr. Clayton wrote that letter.'—From 'A Player Under Three Heavens,' by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

His Share of Cupboards

He'd bought a house and it had been such a bargain to his idea that he could hardly wait till his fiancée saw it.

"How many clothes' cupboards are there, John?" she demanded breathlessly.

"Six," said John proudly.

"Oh, but that's hardly enough." "What! Do you want more than six cupboards merely to hang your clothes in?"

"Yes, dear," replied the fair one. "See, you'll want part of one for your things, won't you?"

Hundreds have put their O. K. on classified columns. They are the starting point of many people's success and prosperity.

OFFICERS WARNED BY GOV. PIERCE TO CURB USE OF GUNS

SALEM, Ore., June 28.—Governor Pierce said today that he is determined that the killing of law violators and suspects by officers making arrests shall stop, and that the letter sent out by him Saturday to peace officers over the state urging them to exercise extreme care in the use of fire arms in making arrests is but a first warning to the officers.

The governor declared that if the killings by officers, which have been increasing at an alarming rate in recent months, do not stop his office will take action to see that they are stopped and to prosecute those officers who shoot without justification in their efforts to enforce the laws.

Governor Pierce said that the letter issued Saturday was the direct result of the killing of John Kamboris by State Officer C. C. McBride during a liquor raid near Broadacres recently, but the governor explained that he was not criticizing McBride as he believed that killing to be justified from what he could learn and he thought "McBride to be a good officer."

GAINES CASE IS SEEMINGLY FAR FROM SOLUTION

Gaines' body was found either could have been buried that distance by the slaver. The objects were given to Luke St. May, a criminologist, for examining to determine whether stains on them were of human blood.

Prosecutor Colvin helped Starwich in the search. Policemen held back a huge Sunday throng which watched the operations.

Inquest So Far Fruitless.
The scene of the other investigation was at a court house, an inquest conducted by County Coroner Carson and which began Friday.

Testimony at the inquest Friday and Saturday was preliminary. Mr. and Mrs. Stokes, who were first thought by many to have seen the killer several minutes before the crime was committed, are now declared to have possibly been mistaken. Stokes said the man he saw wore a coat. Mrs. Stokes insisted it was a sweater. A girl answering Miss Gaines' description was seen by them in the same vicinity.

Mrs. Nellie Jett, a visitor here from Baker, Ore., told of hearing a weird cry—"a cry of despair" while she was writing a letter in a house across the lake.

about casualties.

Maina seems to have escaped with bareness shocks, which, however, caused great alarm among the inhabitants.

In the museum of Candia, an ancient city, capital of the island of Crete, the antiquities damaged included treasures excavated by Sir Arthur Evans at Omosus, ancient capital of Greece, and celebrated in legends of Zeus, Minos, Daedalus and others.

Some of the Athens newspapers say the material damage on the island of Rhodes was slight. There were no fatalities, but a few persons were slightly injured.

Many Injured.
ROME, June 28.—One person was killed and many more were injured on the island of Rhodes in Saturday's earthquake. It was learned today. A light house collapsed and scores of houses were damaged.

The quake shook southern Italy, Sicily, Tripoli and the Dodecanese islands.

Although slight damage was caused in Sicily, panic reigned there, particularly at Messina. Prisoners in the jails at Catania, Messina, Caltagirone were so terror stricken that they mutinied, necessitating the summoning of police reserves.
