News About Women

PARIS. — Reviewers here are devoting much space to the newly published work of Longworth, "Shakespeare, Actor and Poet."

In private life she is the Comtesse de Chambrun, formerly Miss Clara Longworth. Her husband is General Adolphe de Chambrun, one of France's most distinguished officers, now in Morocco.

The French press, as a whole, praised the book as an important contribution to Shakespearean records.

BERLIN. — Henceforth women are to be employed more frequently by the Prussian State as musical advisers and as members on the state examining board for licensing music teachers, the Prussian Minister of Public Worship and Fine Arts has decreed.

This ordinance is the direct result of a petition by the "German Women's League," which has petitioned the state for an increased employment of women in the capacities for their prominence in the field.

WASHINGTON. — "Men must work and women must eat," in the opinion of the National Press Club, which has announced that its new fourteen-story home here will have in addition to its extensive masculine equipment, a ladies' dining room.

This innovation, marking the first real concession to the feminine scribbler, will be for use at all times by women relatives and friends of the club membership.

POTSDAM. (A. P.) — Society women in the former capital of the Hohenzollerns have organized the first women's automobile club in Germany. There are ten charter members.

The only qualification for membership is possession of a driver's license. There is no danger of the club losing its exclusiveness, however, and none but wealthy owners of automobiles and women drivers still are rare in Germany.

PARIS. (A. P.) — From Jenny, dressmaker, and Jeanne Roux, dancer, come the message: "This education is no bar to success. Jenny was educated at Sevres."

THRILL HUNTERS

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER

CHAPTER 4

Clare sat timidly on the edge of the sun-drenched sofa before the untidy dressing table. How much her mother looked like a French doll—a grown-up French doll—when she made her eyes as hard like that. Excepting for the two lines around her mouth. A doll has no lines. . . .

"But Amy," she pleaded softly, "Daddy Paul is operating today. You know he's always nervous when you're—when things aren't just so. His steady hands—why, he might lose a life!"

"Don't be melodramatic, Clare. He doesn't lose lives—not that way. He just rolls them up tight and locks them fast. Like me gone with mine. Oid despot!"

"Oh, Amy, he isn't! Way, there's nobody kinder! He's just sort of—sort of old style, small town and old style. He's just older than you and everybody's looked up to him so long, he thinks he's always right. Besides he did let you train your voice; he wanted you to!"

"Oh, what's the use, Clare? I'm stuck away in this beauty hotel. Wants the use of having the best voice in the world of you can't sing outside your own four walls? You know what a perfect rage he went into when I had that chance up in Cleveland. A chance to fill in with the New York opera company. And you'd thought to hear him that I wanted to lead a choir of hell!"

"There you go, Clare. I never could understand you—always siding with your step-father against your own mother!"

Amy touched her eyes with a small square of lace and her throat worked alarmingly. Clare sat still, however; she'd seen her mother do that before and knew there were no tears on the handkerchief. Amy's grief was mechanical as a doll's and about as convincing.

"I suppose I've got to expect it," she sighed. "Nothing but trouble all my life! Married off to Jim Eddy, when I wasn't as old as you and—"

"Well, no one made you, Mother. You chose him, didn't you?"

"What's that got to do with it? Five years bawling around, knocking ball-collectors, washing dishes, cooking over a gas-pipe with a baby on my knees toward the last! Fine chance to train my voice then, when it would have been easy!"

"And there wasn't any chance after I divorced him and went back to singing at a living wage. Lord, I wish I were back! What a waste! I thought I was the luckiest woman in the world when I came to America and the distinguished Mr. Dean wanted to marry me. I don't know what I did to deserve it!"

She broke off to pick up the telephone, tinkling on the table beside her bed.

"Yes," meekly. "Yes, dear boy."

Clare knew that the man at the other end of the wire was Satterly. Amy went on saying nothing in the intimate manner that made them feel of meaning, and the girl stared at pink satin and wondered.

Would Satterly be another of her mother's "finds," one of the unexplained "protectors" that cluttered up at various times? There'd been so many.

He had a thing that none of the others possessed; a certain suave assurance, arrogance maybe, that some acquire with wealth. They said that in New York, where he lived, he owned an interest in a film producing company. He'd been in Atkins a week, long enough to set every feminine heart thumping.

Well, there was a little more dignity about him than some of the others Amy had taken up. Those University boys, for instance, who sat around the veranda with their notebooks and read her out of countenance like hungry calves. Or the mountain-eyed male, who have played with the stock company last summer at the Opera House and borrowed all her ready cash before he went away.

Or the train peddler. He was the worst of all. How did he catch Amy's attention, a young Sicilian bringing watermelons and—yes, cabbage!—to the back door? A luscious-looking creature, not handsome like most Latins, too; threatened to kill himself, or something. One night he brought his mandoline and sang a gypsy love song under Amy's window. Saddy Paul nearly tore the house down. The fellow disappeared after that, though once Clare heard her mother telephoning him.

Amy hung up the receiver with a little boom!

her flashing smile. "Mr. Satterly is coming this afternoon," she said. "He wants you to go for a drive."

"Me? Oh! But he hardly spoke to me last night! I didn't think—want shall I say to him, Amy? How can I—they don't care for me!"

"A little more pep, lamb. Don't say anything; they suspect you of being too-tender if you do and the five eyes have intelligent women. Buzz around, Clare. That's all you need do; just buzz!"

NO MOVIES OR DANCEHALLS IN ANGORA; OPERA PLANNED

ANGORA, Turkey, July 6.—Angora is believed to be the only capital in the world where there are no cinemas, no theaters, dance-halls, cabarets or other places of amusement.

Although the Anatolian metropolis has a population of 8,000, there are no recreations or diversions of any kind. "This is not due to any restrictions of the Koran or Turkish religion, but to the fact that Angora is just emerging from a mud volcano to a modern capital. Mustafa Kemal, the Turkish dictator, promises that in time the Turkish people and foreign residents will have ample amusements. Plans are now under way for the erection of an opera house to seat 3,000 persons.

FORMER RESIDENTS HERE CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING

PORTLAND, July 6. — Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Elder of Stayton, Ore., recently celebrated their golden wedding. They were married at Osborn, Kansas, June 1, 1879, and in 1881 moved to Stayton, where they resided until 1905, when they moved to Roseburg to assume charge of the Oregon Soldiers Home. They were there almost 13 years. Mr. Elder served in company F, 78th Pennsylvania Infantry, during the Civil war and is one of the two remaining members of the Grand army at Stayton. A family dinner was held at the old home with three generations present. Mr. and Mrs. Elder were charter members of the Eastern Star in Stayton and members of the order helped celebrate their golden wedding. The lodge room was beautifully decorated and the bride and bridegroom, accompanied by grand children, with Ellamae Smith as flower girl, Misses Margaret Miller and Neva Smith as bridesmaids, and Wallace and Laurence Smith as groomsmen, marched into the room, being met at the altar by Prof. O. V. White, who married them again with the ring ceremony. Their family of four children are: Mr. W. A. Elder of Mill City; Mrs. Maud Smith, Mrs. Lilly Miller and Mrs. G. P. Nelson of Stayton. There are nine grand children and two great grand daughters.

Keep your eye on Sutherlin. Something is going to happen.

FORMER EDENBOWER RESIDENT IS DEAD

Elizabeth A. Spiecher, who for many years was a resident of Edenbower, died on July 3 at her residence in Portland. Mrs. Spiecher spent a number of years in Edenbower, having there for Portland about fifteen years ago. She was 85 years of age and the mother of Lillian S. Adams. The funeral was held today.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

In justice to the public and to myself and associates, who are drilling for oil or gas near Sutherlin, I beg to say to all that neither myself nor my associates have any connection with any campaign for the selling of Sutherlin real estate. We have no interest in any such campaign or in the property advertised or in the proceeds of sale, and knew nothing about the movement until we saw the printed advertisements.

NEW YORK SUBWAY EMPLOYEES STRIKE FOR HIGHER WAGE

Local Service Is Crippled and Lines to Brooklyn Cease Operations Temporarily.

(Associated Press Special Wire.) NEW YORK, July 6.—This metropolitan area was in the throes of a strike on its principal subway system, which daily transports more passengers than comprises the population of Chicago.

Reports assembled nine hours after the motormen and switchmen of the Interborough Rapid Transit company went on strike at midnight for increased wages, showed that a curtailed service was being maintained by strike breakers and that there was some congestion, especially at the morning "peak" rush hour. The service to Brooklyn was temporarily abandoned.

Some express trains were being operated at 15 minute intervals, instead of the usual three minute headway. The "local" service, where stops were made at every station, was faster than the express system.

No violence was reported. Nearly 7,000 policemen were assigned at the strategic traffic points to maintain order and bluecoats were on every train guarding the crews.

Thousands of persons on their way to work, anticipating delays, forsook usual underground routes and took elevated lines, buses, railroad trains and trolleys. This caused overcrowding above the ground but eased the task of the subway system.

"I have been touring California since February, so it is easy to see that I am in no hurry to get home," said Mr. A. M. Johnson of Astoria, Nebraska. Mr. Johnson is now intending to spend some time in the Pacific Northwest and is writing stories of his travels to the papers in the Nebraska city. He is accompanied by his two sisters and will spend about six weeks more on the coast before returning home.

Phalmenen find it hard to accuse themselves to driving over Oregon's hills, thinks T. H. Adrian of Santa Springs, Okla., who drove into Roseburg last night. He is accompanied by his wife, two children and his mother.

G. T. Barton and wife of Los Angeles are making the last lap of a trip around the United States. They were anxious to get home, but enjoyed this section so much that they have been in the camp ground five days.

To spend their 39th wedding anniversary in the Roseburg Auto Park was the experience of Mr. and Mrs. E. Hathaway of Bandon. They stated that the Coos Bay-Roseburg highway is in fine shape and that Bandon is making elaborate preparations for the celebration during the Independence Day holidays. They are enroute to Lewiston, Idaho.

Mr. W. Wright and family of Los Angeles are on their way to Seattle where they will board a boat for Seward, Alaska. After spending some time in Seward they will go by train to Fairbanks where they will visit.

HUSBAND DID THE WASHING

His Wife Confined to Her Bed by Ill Health

Because of his wife's frequent ill health, Mr. J. F. Gage was obliged to do the washing and cooking for the family.

One day when Mrs. Gage was confined to her bed, he brought her the newspaper to read. Among the advertisements she noticed a letter from a rather sick woman telling of the help she had received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I'll try it," she decided. Her husband brought home a bottle and only a few days after she had begun to take it she felt well enough to be up around the house. Gradually her general health improved until she is now able to do her own work.

In a letter which Mrs. Gage recently wrote she said: "I feel like a new woman." She has told many women about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and one of her friends is now taking it. Her address is Mrs. J. F. Gage, Route 5, Brownwood, Tex.
