THRILL HUNTERS

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER

CHAPTER 10.

Under the drift of letters there was one addressed in Amy's hand. It was to someone in New York; Clare made out "Mr." but the name was blotted. She judged the envelope had been mailed when the ink still was wet, for the name and the street were quite illegible.

In the return corner Amy had written her home address instead of her hotel; that was why the letter had found its way here. It was unlike Amy, somehow.

The girl caught it up with the idea of placing it in her mother's room; then she thought her stepfather called and before going back to the study, laid it on the table.

He was sitting in his chair; she told him good-night and went on upstairs, forgetting the square with the blurred writing.

It was sometime in the night that Clare jumped awake. There was no sound, nothing to call her from deep slumber, yet she sat up, terrified.

She put out a cold little hand and pulled on the light. Not so late after all—only one o'cock. She reached for her robe and thrust her feet into sippers beside the bed, listening. Still no sound; the house was asleep it seemed, yet the sense of a thing dreadfully wrong was like a presence.

She crept down the stairs, followed a bright line under the door of the study and went in softly. Dr. Paul still sat before the grate, a paper in his hand.

She said: "Did you call me? I've been frightened—"

He made no answer, sitting there with the paper rustling faintly, and she went to him, her heart pounding against her throat. "Daddy! Are you ill? Oh, Daddy Paul—"

His face was twisted so one eye was nearly closed and he slumped in the chair, his left arm hanging. He spoke in a strange mumble:

"Letter—burn it. Amy—"

Shaking so she could hardly stand, she took the sheet and placed it on the coals. With a tremendous effort he pointed to a square on the floor and she put that upon the flame. It was the envelope she had seen on the hall table, addressed in her mother's hand.

There was relief, almost happiness, in his wrung face when she turned to him, sobbing.

"Thought it mine," he mumbled. "Mistake—call Ted —"

Then she was battering on Ted's door and he was coming out, rubbing his eyes but wholly alert when she cried. "Hurry — oh, hurry! He's all twisted—don't let him die, Ted!"

He said, harshly, "Be quiet, Clare!" and she followed him to the still figure.

Even in her panic she noted the firm gentleness of Ted's fingers as he removed his brother's collar and placed a stethoscope against his heart. He snapped directions and she boiled water for him in the kitchen, stood by while he dissolved a tablet, and something with a hypodermic.

In a voice unlike his own he said, "How do you feel, old man?"

The answering mumble set Clare's heart pounding again; 'End—felt it coming — working too hard—" The stricken man's eyes met hers, pleaded in agony; they moved almost imperceptibly toward the grate.

"He doesn't want Ted to know about the letter," she thought and clung to the lifeless left hand. "You can trust me, Daddy Paul! You know you can trust me!"

He closed his eyes then and Ted sent her for Samuels. They carried the doctor up to his room, the guest room, where he had moved the night of Clare's party, and when Ted came out a great deal later he found her crouching on the floor outside the door.

"Poor little girl kid," he said. "What it it, Ted? Is he suffering? Ted?—"

He bent over, so his hands were beneath her elbows and helped her up. "Better go to bed, Clare. I'll put in a call for your mother. We'll try to get her here — in time," he finished drearily.

"He shan't die! You've got to save him, Ted! You've got to save my daddy—my daddy!"

"Clare, listen to me. Do you think I wouldn't give my life for his? I'm going to call others, older than I am and wiser. But I know! He's had a shock and a stroke—a few hours. Oh my God!"

Tears ran down his face; he went blindly to the telephone and gave the long distance operator the name of Amy's hotel in New York.

Clare stumbled to her room and dressed; physicians came hurriedly and passed in and out, their faces grave. They talked in low voices of Dr. Paul; told of lives his skill had saved and of his charities and good works. They said: "A great loss — a sad loss!"

At five o'clock Clare asked Ted about her mother. The operator had reported every hour throughout the night, he explained, that Amy was not in her room.

CENTRAL POINT MARSHAL FACING LIQUOR CHARGE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

MEDFORD, Ore., July 12.—James Cummings, town marshal of Central Point, was arrested last night, and is charged with possession of liquor. He entered a plea of not guilty this morning in police court. The authorities allege that Marshal Cummings was present when a liquor deal was consummated and that when they entered the house, three gallons of moonshine was on the floor near where Cummings was standing. Vern Hansen, arrested at the same time, entered a plea of guilty, and was fined $750, and given 60 days in jail, for possession and sale. James Cavanaugh of Klamath Falls, was arrested as the alleged purchaser of the liquor and Tom Olson, as an alleged party in the transaction.

Other week-end arrests for liquor violations include H. C. Sutherland and R. R. McCroskey for alleged possession and J. E. Arnes, all of this city for possession of a gallon of wine.

A lot in Sutherlin Valley at this time may mean much in the near future.

RISING MARKET FAILS TO ATTRACT HOP GROWERS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

PORTLAND, Ore., July 12.—Hop growers are not overly anxious to sign further contracts on a rising market even at the 26 cent offers and sales are limited. According to reports the 1926 crop is already contracted heavier than usual with probably 65 or 70 per cent signed.

The crop this year is expected to run close to 12,870,000 pounds as compared to a five-year average of 11,316,000 pounds. There are approximately 13,000 acres in hops in the state.

JOURNALISM FOR PREACHERS

CHICAGO, July 13.—A course in journalism for preachers is announced by Dr. Carl Eiselen, president of Garrett Biblical Institute, beginning this fall.

The chief aim of the course will be to teach prospective ministers what constitutes news acceptable to the editors of their future communities, and how to advertise their church and work.

STATE FLAX PLANT NEEDS MONEY FOR EMERGENCY

SALEM, Ore., July 13.—At the request of Governor Pierce, Secretary of State Kozer yesterday issued a call for a meeting of the state emergency board on Wednesday of this week to consider an emergency appropriation of from $50,000 to $75,000 for the flax industry at the state penitentiary. The money is needed to pay farmers for new flax now being received. The money will be repaid the state, it is said, as soon as the finished product is sold.

New Gland Treatment Discovered

By a new discovery the vital gland substance may now be supplied in tablet form. This method of treatment is highly recommended by European and American scientists who have proved that the internal administration of gland extract has a very marked effect upon the corresponding glands of the human body, often reawakening them to normal activity.

Glandogen, the new scientific gland tonic, which is prepared in convenient tablet form, for men and for women, provides a simple method of taking glandular treatment. Accept no substitutes. Insist on genuine Glandogen, the original gland tonic. Chapman's drug store will supply you.

DEER CREEK LOWEST IT HAS BEEN IN 75 YEARS ACCORDING TO RESIDENTS

"Deer Creek is the lowest it has been in 75 years," said O. C. Brown today. Mr. Brown came in this morning from his farm on North Deer Creek. Mr. Brown was in early in order to get back to his home before the heat of the day as the fine grove around his house affords a coolness which the residents of the city envy on hot days.

"I have talked with residents who have been familiar with Deer Creek for more than 75 years," Mr. Brown said, "and they all agree that it has never been as low as at present. In fact, it has almost stopped running and the water is standing in pools. The extreme dry weather is working a great hardship on those who have been using the water for irrigating purposes."

"GAS THE BORERS"

P-Z Benzine gas crystals will kill prune and peach borers better than any other method yet discovered. The prune and peach growers can not afford to let these insect pests sap the vitality of their trees when a small investment in this drug will save the tree.

The County Agent or Horticultural Inspector will take pleasure in demonstrating the application of the gas crystals to the trees in any community where demonstrations have never been held. The season for using these gas crystals will soon be upon us and any one unfamiliar with its use should see members of the County Extension force.

WOMAN SLIGHTLY HURT IN AUTO WRECK YESTERDAY

Miss Bernice Britton, and Mrs. C. R. Stryker, of Brady, Neb., members of a traveling orchestra, received minor injuries yesterday in an auto accident near Wolf Creek. Edward Hiramato, Japanese chauffeur for Mr. and Mrs. Henry Koepke of Glendale, Calif., was arrested for reckless driving in connection with the wreck.

According to Traffic Officer Thurber the accident occurred when Hiramato, driving a Cadillac sedan occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Koepke, attempted to pass another car on a turn and met the Stryker machine, a Pontiac, occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Stryker, Miss Britton, Gladyce Thompson and Frank Schwab, all members of an itinerant dance orchestra.

Miss Britton and Mrs. Stryker received minor cuts and bruises, which, however, were not of a serious nature. Dr. Fawcett of Glendale was called to attend them.

Hiramato was placed under arrest by Officer Thurber and was taken to Grants Pass for trial today.
