rough handling on July 12, 1925, when they were evicted from their quarters on the grounds of the Pacific Spruce Corporation at Toledo, were reiterated by the witnesses for the defense yesterday afternoon in federal court in the trial of the damage suit of T. Ogura and others against six Toledans charged with participation in the driving out of the Japanese.

Witnesses reiterated their determination at that time to use every effort to keep the Japanese out, though denying that any plan for using force was made. Denate Aguilas, a Filipino, testified that he was hired with three other Filipinos, by Kawamoto, went to Toledo with the Japanese and was assigned to quarters with them, but that when he told two members of the mob that came to his door that he was a Filipino, they left him alone. However, the Filipinos came away with the Japanese, he said.

Mrs. Inez Kiese testified to the invasion of the company's property by the mob, but said there was no violence and no threats.

The case will continue into next week.

THRILL HUNTERS

CHAPTER 14.

The next Clare knew, her mother was at the telephone, lifting a number as if it had been a song. But when she asked for Satterly her radiance dimmed. "So sorry! He won't be in today? I'll call again."

"Well," she said, "that's that—the imperfect end of a perfectly good day. What'll we do for the rest of the afternoon and evening?"

"Couldn't we just be quiet, Amy?"

"If New York? How provincial! You've got to modernize—but we'll talk that over later. This would be a good time to see the Harrisons. The tea hour—we won't have to stay."

"You mean the rich Harrisons? Dr. Paul's cousins?"

"Uh-huh. Sue's probably an old tramp, but they might come in handy. Similarly right. Put on that little serge you brought from Atkins, darling. I'll go as the deeply bereaved in what I'm wearing. Good thing I kept one black outfit," she rattled on.

The taxi took them up the Avenue and stopped around the corner from Central Park before an imposing old mansion. There was a jolly grandeur, rather a solemnity, in the room with its portraits and its walnut paneling to which they were conducted. Clare hoped her mother wouldn't exclaim this time to be flippant.

They were greeted by an exquisite little old lady. Clare thought her thin, blue-veined hands and face like wrinkled porcelain the loveliest she ever had seen. And the dark eyes recalled other eyes she had known and loved.

"Why, you look like Daddy Paul!" she exclaimed, and hugged before her mother's stare.

"Forgive her, Mrs. Harrison. She's been unreasonably upset by my husband's death."

The old lady, however, kissed Clare and drew her down upon a couch.

"You must consider this your home, my dear. Come any time, especially if you need me. I'm sure Paul loved you—and so do I!"

Later the girl had reason to remember the words and the look that went with them. But it was not until long afterward that she understood that look, the pity in it.

Otherwise the call was not a success. Old Mrs. Harrison seemed unmoved by Amy's protestations of irreparable loss. And although she was a most cordial hostess, Amy laughed maliciously at her had taken leave.

"Won't you know it? They're all alike, the Deans, high and mighty because you won't sit with your hands folded and be stodgey. Well, that's my swan song to the family."

They dined alone and went early to their extravagant watching a sea of lights roll in every direction, some of them flung like gleaming spray, into the sky. These became delightful whimsies out of her small-girl fairy books; a kitten chasing a spool; a tiny little man doing a funny little dance in costumes of green and red fire.

Long after she had gone to bed she heard her mother moving restlessly about; talking into the telephone. She was calling Satterly again, but vainly, as her impatience indicated.

So ended Clare's first day in New York, and so began a new and bewildering existence for the maiden with a mission, "Save Amy from herself! Romance, Clare—promise!"

She had promised and she was here to try to make good her word. An eighteen-year-old small-town kid had come to the City to save her mother!

That quashing person lost no time getting her plans under way the next morning. After her coffee in bed, Clare crossed the sitting room to Amy's bedroom, where she could hear another coaxing indirectly into the telephone, wixing a great many "dear boys" into her end of the conversation.

"And here's my intent," she rapped on. "Certainly she's with me! Didn't I say I'd come to stay? A foursome? Gorgeous! Well, good-bye, dear boy—"

She yawned about, blew a kiss toward the ceiling. "We're dining with Bob Satterly, dear, and a friend of his. Life isn't so deadly!" She yawned with her arms over her head. It made her daughter think of a cat, some way; a big and beautiful and rather dangerous creature. A tigress, perhaps.

At eight o'clock Mr. Bob Satterly marched into the sitting room and took both Clare's hands.

"Princess! I've been waiting for this moment—"

She regarded him with a wide, blue stare. Did he mean it? Because if he did he also meant that kiss in the library back home and . . . But she was in love with Ted! So how could she feel this—this something—just because he touched her hands and said a few words?

Before she could even try to understand he was introducing his companion.

"Amy, this is Ticky Swan. Born with a long-handled glass spoon in his mouth. That vacant look is admiration. Come on, Ticky, sing for the lady!"

VETS OF FOREIGN WARS HEAR SPEECH OF NATIONAL HEAD

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
EUGENE, Ore., July 17.—Committee appointments and brief sessions featured the opening day of the annual encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Oregon here yesterday. Today the state officers will be elected.

Fred A. Stover, national commander, is here attending the encampment. Members of the auxiliary of the state are also in session here.

Resolutions and a recommendation on a proposed change of by-laws will come up at today's session, in addition to the election of the state officers. Clyde A. Warren, senior vice commander of the Oregon department, is being boomed as the most likely candidate for the office of state commander.

National Commander Stover, in his talk to the veterans yesterday, told of the work of the national department and of the home for disabled veterans which has been established in Michigan by the organization. He is just finishing a trip of 35,000 miles at his own expense, during which he visited every state in the union. He came here from Seattle and will leave tonight for Salt Lake.

The V. F. W. is in fine shape financially and in most of the districts the membership is good, he said. The west in general, Mr. Stover added, is behind the east in interest, membership and finances, but is rapidly realizing the value of the organization and is coming to the front.

BLAST HURLS HUGE ROCK INTO HOME; 3 WOMEN INJURED

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
EUGENE, Ore., July 17.—Mrs. E. E. Wirt of Oakridge and Miss Dorothy Dorrer, also of that city, were seriously injured late yesterday afternoon when an 18-inch boulder hurled through the side of the Wirt home. The accident was the result of a blast set off by the Southern Pacific workmen, engaged in clearing the railroad yards.

Mrs. Dorrer, a cripple, who was also in the room, came out of her wheel chair and ran into another room, where she collapsed.

Mrs. Wirt was badly cut about the face and neck. One four-inch gash across her eye and cheek nearly caused the loss of the eye, but attending physicians today said that they believed the eye could be saved.

Miss Dorrer also was badly cut and her lip was mashed. Her face is badly swollen today.

The three women were visiting in the dining room of the Wirt home, when the big rock crashed through the side of the house with out warning. The room was damaged by the impact.

MINT GROWERS TO HOLD FIELD DAY ON JULY 29TH

Inspection to Be Made of Fields While Experts Will Discuss Important Subjects.

A field day for mint growers of the county will be held at Sutherlin on Thursday, July 29, the purpose being to give growers and others interested an opportunity to view the fields in the Sutherlin valley and to obtain information and advice regarding the culture and harvesting methods.

The culture and harvesting of peppermint is acknowledged to be a new addition to the large number of crops successfully grown in the county. It might be said that 90 per cent of the growers now owning more than 250 acres of mint are growing the crop for the first time.

Mint culture proves the rule of all crops, in that it requires for profitable returns certain adaptive soils, methods of planting, culture and time of harvest. In order that growers, business and professional men and others directly interested in the industry may obtain first hand information, County Agent Cooney has arranged a field day when fields of mint will be examined in the Sutherlin valley and Clark county. These fields will show the difference between spring and fall plantings on certain soil types existing there, while varieties such as white, black and spearmint will be viewed.

The value of commercial fertilizers will receive attention as will methods of cultivation, while growers will be given an opportunity to examine two or more new hills ready or in operation. Varieties of new weeds will receive attention and many other important phases of the business will naturally come up for discussion.

Good speakers have been secured for a program in the evening, including such well informed men as Prof. A. G. Douget, chief in gardening at O. A. C., Wm. L. Toubert, district agricultural agent for western Oregon, while prominent mint growers of the state will give their experiences. County Agent Cooney will give a brief analysis of the industry within the county. The day's program has been carefully prepared and it is expected that it will be of great value to growers.

All those desiring to attend the field day meeting and program are invited to be at the Sutherlin hotel promptly at 10 o'clock Thursday morning, July 29.

We manufacture special sash, doors, screens and moldings on short notice. Also carry a complete stock of plate and window glass. L. W. Metzger.

NOTICE OF FINAL SETTLEMENT

In the County Court of the State of Oregon for Douglas County.

In the matter of the estate of Francis H. Hart, deceased.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned Violet McCulloch, executrix of the estate of Francis H. Hart, deceased, has filed her final account in the settlement of said estate, in the above entitled Court, and the Court has fixed Monday, the 26th day of July, 1926, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M. of said day and the office of the County Judge, in Douglas County Court room, at Roseburg, Oregon, as the time and place for the hearing of said account and objections thereto, if any, and said Court ordered that a notice of said settlement be published in the Roseburg News-Review, for a period of four weeks prior to date of settlement.

Dated and first published this 26th day of June, 1926.

VIOLET McCULLOCH,
Executrix of the estate of Francis H. Hart, deceased.
JOHN T. LONG,
Attorney for the Estate.

HURD SAYS PRUNE OUTLOOK NOT DISCOURAGING

The prune situation is such that there is no need for growers to be discouraged, says C. J. Hurd, agricultural economist of the state college extension service, former Douglas County agricultural agent. Producers are in a better position than they were a year ago, reports show, production and hold-over surplus considered.

"Crop production cannot be accurately forecast," says Mr. Hurd. "The set was unusually good, but sizes hardly run to normal, which may bring the northwest crop pretty close to normal."

The California crop is estimated at 250 to 275 million pounds, the Oregon at 60 to 75 million pounds of dried prunes, giving a total of 334 million pounds, with almost no hold-over surplus. The California output last year was 344 million pounds, the Oregon crop 41 million, with enough hold-over surplus to bring the total to be disposed of to 405 million pounds. This was 71 million pounds more to go on the market than will be offered this year.

Prune drier capacity as well as prune production must be taken into consideration in estimating output of dried prunes, Mr. Hurd points out. Present capacity in Oregon and Clark county, Washington, is around 3 million pounds a day. The average time of drying season before the fall rains set in and spoil it, is 20 days. This somewhat arbitrarily limits output to 60 million pounds in the whole northwest, even though the crop should run somewhat above that mark. The present capacity may be increased slightly by converting natural draft to recirculation system, but of course unfavorable weather may tend the other way.

The 1925 prices have been slightly under the 1924 figure, owing to the light surplus beyond current marketing interests. On the other hand the growers are getting the support of business and professional men of their communities. And present prices encourage wider consumption both at home and in Europe.

M. C. RADABAUGH,
Auctioneer, 530 N. Pine St., Roseburg, Oregon.

The representative of the Anchor Numbering System will be in the city until August 31st and will call on the property owners that they may cooperate with us, that the city of Roseburg may adopt the best house numbering system now in use by the more progressive cities of the coast.
