ROSEBURG, OREGON, TUESDAY, AUG. 31, 1926.

HIGH COST OF REACHING VOTERS.

The following editorial from the San Francisco Chronicle is a fair statement of the expense of conducting a modern primary campaign:

"Twenty-two cents is a fair average cost of appealing to the individual voter. Given 2,500,000 voters, as there are in Illinois, that means $550,000 as the cost of legitimately addressing the voters in one campaign. That is the way it is figured out by Allen F. Moore, campaign manager for Frank I. Smith, who won the Republican nomination for senator from Illinois.

"Ask anyone who has ever had any experience in conducting any kind of a campaign where a large number of individuals had to be reached. The amount of money that may be spent legitimately is, in a large state, enormous if the campaign is complete.

"What will twenty-two cents do? A circular letter addressed to each voter in the state costs from five to eight cents apiece, according to the size and number of enclosures. Would the candidate be satisfied with firing one postal volley? If not, he must repeat the expenditure. And then there is the expense of halls hired, of brass bands, campaign buttons, clerical workers, publicity men, billboard and other forms of advertising, transportation and getting on the air. It all mounts up.

"When money is so used legitimately it is not the spending of it that is vicious. The vicious element is the system which makes it impossible for any man to make an intensive campaign before a large number of voters without spending a lot of money. That is one of the weaknesses of the primary system. It needs to be cured or the sentiment of the public is likely to be turned back to the convention system as a lesser evil."

THE COMING SCHOOL YEAR.

In many respects the schools are about the most fundamental thing in American civilization. As long as we have good schools, where the coming generation is taught how to work efficiently and to perform the duties of citizenship, the country is not going to wreck, even though great faults exist in our social system. So when these schools, one of these bright September mornings, open up for a new year of work, an event of the most profound significance takes place. The public schools should have loyal and enthusiastic support. Taxpayers in many cities growl about the costs of education, and sometimes they may seem excessive in certain particulars. But when you consider how the community would suffer if the schools became slack and poor, they are worth all they cost and more. The parents may say that their children do not get along as fast as they would like to have them. If so, the chances are ten to one that the trouble is with the home environment. They are too poorly disciplined at home, so that they get into an independent attitude in school, and will not settle down and perform their tasks loyally. The children may say that they do not see the necessity for this or that regulation or study, and set themselves against these features of the training. Even if they were perfectly right in such a feeling, such an attitude of resistance tends to dull the enthusiasm of the school, and reduce its achievement. They would better take it for granted that the wisdom of educators and elders knows better what is needed than they do, and do their best to do the job set for them. The young people of Roseburg will never regret such effort after the school days have passed.

THE LAW'S DELAY

It takes so long to punish the man whose hands are red, who has with temper flung his sword of death! With villainy enraptured, he shoots down harmless folk, and when he has been captured he thinks it is a joke. "For," mutters this destroyer of voters two or three, "I'll hire a first class lawyer and he will get me free. I will be jailed," he'll reason, "like other gifted boys, but I'll enjoy a season of comfort and repose. They'll feed me wholesome lunches for which the state will pay; and girls will bring me bunches of roses bright and gay. Nob sisters and reporters will write up my career and I'll enjoy my quarters in prison for a year." When first he is arrested we'd see his halter draw; too long the ruffian's jested with justice and the law. Too long, too long he's baffled the coppers we admire; to see him mount the scaffold is our supreme desire. But in the rush and clangor we have our fish to fry, and we forget our anger, as time goes rolling by. We hear about the killer, at times, as seasons flee; his lawyer is a pillar of his fraternity. With such a smooth attorney to guard the gory brute, he will not make a journey to Tyburn's substitute. He's tried, we learn, convicted, and sentenced to his doom, but he is not afflicted with an excessive gloom. The lawyer starts appealing to higher courts, we hear, and there is now a feeling that mercy should appear. Some day we read the paper and find the fellow's freed; his lawyer, Pinchbeck Draper, has pulled a stunt indeed. He found a semi-colon somewhere in wrongful place, which left a fatal hole on the prosecution's case. Then every vicious sinner who isn't doing time congratulates the winner, and pulls another crime.

HUNTING

And yes, verily by the great Whittlers bend, the hunter ariseth in the cold gray dawn; and he decketh himself with fearful and wonderful garments, which he hath purchased from some mail order house and which have cost him back a month of shekels. And he picketh up 12.22 gun and borroweth some cartridges from a local native and he staggereth forth to slay, yes, verily, to slay. And he stumbleth over rocks and logs and cusseth in loud tones. And he diveth into the proverbial green puddle where the frog liveth in the raspberry. And he cometh forth along for many kilometers and he mistaketh deer for cows and cows for deer. And the farmer cusseth him in a language which he understandeth. And the farmer's pet bull, with a mean look, pursueth him and jabeth him with a crooked horn and helieth him into a barbed wire fence. And the day weareth on and still he has slain nothing. Then at last cometh the mighty roar of his gun, and he putteth a load of BB shot into the tonneau of another damphool whom he taketh for a coyote or a squirrel. And he payeth much to have the matter hushed up, and with weary step he shouldereth his gun and starteth toward Roseburg. And when he reacheth the Mecca of the hunter he taketh himself to a local harness shop, where he lieth—YEA VERILY, he lieth so that ye scribe of ye Prune Pickin's seemeth like a rank amateur.

VISITORS REMAIN TO MAKE HOMES IN DOUGLAS COUNTY

Not only is Douglas county living up to its motto "The End of the Home Seekers' Trail," but of recent has been proving a place where tourists come to visit, view the delightful scenery, are captivated by the climate and remain to make their home, as evidenced by a number who recently visited in the city and are now disposing of property elsewhere to make Douglas county their home.

Out of the six different families who have visited here during the summer as guests of W. R. Sieg, owner of the Pioneer Drug Store, all from Mr. Sieg's former home at Edmond, Oklahoma, four of the families are locating here. Mr. Sieg himself, a great booster for Oregon and Douglas county, came to Roseburg ninety days ago and was so captivated by the climate, scenery and general conditions, that he immediately decided to make Roseburg his home and purchased the Pioneer Drug Store from L. L. Crocker, later bringing his family here. Mr. Sieg took his visitors up the North Umpqua on fishing trips and at different points in the county on scenic tours. Harry Wright, who with his family visited at the Sieg home, has gone to Edmond to sell his property and will return with members of his family as soon as business interests are disposed of to purchase a ranch near Roseburg.

Felix Winkler and Charles Phillips, who with their families came to visit in Roseburg, were so impressed with the city and surrounding districts, that they have remained to stay and are now employed at the Drager Fruit Company.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ralph of Los Angeles, also Mr. Sieg's guests during the summer, formerly of Edmond, Oklahoma, will dispose of their property in southern California and return here to invest in property. Mr. Ralph is a retired businessman.

George E. Pans and H. L. Griffin with their families also visited in Roseburg and spent two weeks on the North Umpqua enjoying a fishing trip as Mr. Sieg's guests. They were very much impressed with the climate conditions, excellent fishing and beautiful scenic spots, surrounding Roseburg.
