TOURISTS COME TO OREGON DESPITE WEATHER THREAT

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

SALEM, Ore., Nov. 30.—That the tourist is undaunted by the first mists of the Oregon fall is shown by the record of registrations of non-resident cars coming into the state during the month of October, numbering 5,965 cars. This brings the total registration from January 1, to October 31, 1926, to 85,368, representing an increase of 9,238 over the registrations for the corresponding ten months of 1925 and passing the total registration mark for the year 1925 by 3,655. Fifty nine different states and countries have been represented by these visitors during the years.

PAUL CLAUDEL NEW FRENCH AMBASSADOR TO AMERICA

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

PARIS, Nov. 30.—The cabinet today ratified Foreign Minister Briand's choice of Paul Claudel, now ambassador to Japan, to succeed Henry Berenger, as ambassador to the United States. M. Berenger refused to accept further extension of his appointment to the post on the ground that his work in connection with the debt funding agreement was completed. Official declaration of M. Claudel's appointment is withheld, subject to the usual acceptance on the part of the Washington government.

ASBURY PARK, N. J.—Tradition says that a bobbed haired pirate ravaged these shores several centuries ago and now a pointed shoe, partly petrified, has been found imbedded in the beach. A woman's gold ring and a bracelet were encased in it.

Reasons for Indians Holding Cow Sacred

The sacred cow is one of the chief causes of friction between the Hindus and the Moslems in India. The Hindus regard her almost as dear as life, whereas the Moslems not only eat beef but also sacrifice cows at their festival of Bakrid. This disregard of Hindu sentiment often results in riots.

The cow is the protector of India, because it, being an agricultural country, is dependent upon the cow's progeny. She is a most useful animal in hundreds of ways. Many of the functions performed in America by gas, steam and electricity are performed in India by oxen. They plow the fields, draw carts, (passenger and freight), grind mortar, cement and oil seed. Cow's milk, apart from its ordinary use, is converted into curds, butter, milk and ghee, articles of food used daily in every Indian home. The dung is used to great advantage by the farmer and the housewife. One does not adequately realize the vital importance of the cow until one has been in India. In short, the cow is the great river and sustainer of life, and in India, this entitles her to reverential treatment.

Moreover, it is a matter of tremendous importance that the cow be protected from the butcher's knife. How best can that be done? By regarding cow protection as a religious duty—Stephen Ganapatti Krishnayya in Current History Magazine.

Siwash Thought Name a Little Premature

Seattle missed being named New York merely because, about seventy-five years ago, a Siwash grinn'd at the pretentiousness of the name palmed above the store door at a tiny settlement. The present city of 400,000 people was founded by Lee Terry of Watertown, N. Y., who had an ambition to travel to the Northwest and with the farmers, homesteaders, lumbermen and millers there, found a city that should rival Manhattan. He had intended to settle south of the sound, but met the original booster for Puget sound and was persuaded to change his destination to Elliott bay. When his first cabin was finished he shaved off a pine plank and proudly christened his embryo city, "New York." Terry sat in his store one day wishing for customers when a Siwash, blanketed against the cold, stalked up and looked at the sign above the door. The Indian grinn'd. "That's New York—Alki," meaning "New York—by and by." Whereupon Terry sighed and changed his name to Alki. And Alki point is a part of Seattle today.—New York Times.

Human Ear Not Perfect

Vibrations felt in churches or motion-picture theaters while the organ is being played are nothing more or less than sounds. They are really part of the music; the organ notes of the organ, set so low as they pitched that while the body can feel them as vibrations, the ears cannot hear them at all. In fact, says Popular Science Monthly, all about you, in the noise and hubbub of modern life, the air is full of sounds that you cannot hear. Just as there are notes so low that ears cannot catch them, others are so shrill that they have no effect on the ear. Many scientists believe that some animals and insects can hear tones that are inaudible to humans.

Witchcraft in Europe

A witchcraft case in Staffordshire, England, recalls the fact that witchcraft still lingers in all parts of Europe. The British penal laws were repealed in 1736, but there have been cases within the last thirty or forty years, especially in the Highlands, in which there have been reports of witchcraft. It was estimated that between 1484 and 1782 no fewer than 300,000 supposed witches were put to death in Europe, but there have been cases in which "witches" have been lynched much more recently. The usual form of witchcraft to survive is that in connection with the making of a wax image of the person to be bewitched, clay being used instead of wax in the Highlands.

"Freaks" of Nature

Nature presents many puzzles, and though one frequently reads about the curiosities of many of the larger animals, some of the lesser-known "freaks" are more interesting. The great increase in weight of animals, such as the elephant and hippopotamus, is often recorded, but the private-moth increases its weight 11,000 times in its 32 days of feeding, says London Tit-Bits.

Even the private-hawk moth's unusual growth is surpassed by that of the goat moth, which increases its original weight 72,000 times, though it takes three years to do so. Some butterflies have no mouth and take no food during their lives.

Crowded, Quiet Place

It was a hot summer Sunday afternoon and the tired motorist was weary of the heavy traffic of which he was a part. He stopped at a village oil station. "Can you tell me," he asked the proprietor, "where I can find a nice quiet road away from the traffic?" "Well," replied the oil man, "that fork down the left's where I been sendin' all the folks that asked me today."—American Legion Weekly.

REPUTATION OF MRS. GIBSON NOW TARGET AT TRIAL

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 30.—Introduced by the state to testify as to the reputation of Mrs. Jane Gibson for truth and veracity, a witness created a mild sensation in court during the trial of the Hall-Mills case today by saying that it was "not so good."

The defense had offered a dozen witnesses to say that Mrs. Gibson, regarded as the star witness for the prosecution, bore a poor reputation for truthfulness in the community in which she lived and Special Prosecutor Alexander Simpson announced that he would offer character witnesses for Mrs. Gibson in rebuttal.

Dr. J. H. Cooper, of Milstone, furnished the surprising testimony from a state's witness.

There was no great interest when the prosecutor asked Dr. Cooper the stereotyped question: "What is her reputation for truth and veracity, good or bad?"

The crowd sat up when Dr. Cooper replied: "Not so good."

Later the witness said in reply to a question from the state's lawyer, that her reputation was "about fifty-fifty." There was no cross-examination.

Court opened with a tense feeling in the air, caused by an announcement yesterday that when the evidence is in the state will ask that a mistrial be directed. Other than that a letter had been written in which the conduct of the jury was criticized, the state had no statement in regard to the possible motion for a dismissal of the trial. The defense, too, was silent.

Reported ill—Mrs. O. P. Henderson of this city is reported to be quite ill at her home. Her son, Ray Henderson, of Medford, was called here the latter part of last week.

News-Review advertisers can attest to the pulling power of this paper from an advertising standpoint.
