The SECRET STUDIO

By Hazel Livingston

CHAPTER 15.

The Story So Far: Rosemary Marton, youngest daughter in a large family, rebels at her poor surroundings and dreams of romance and luxury. Following a short romance with Philip Eames, she quits college and through Nina Clark, a friend, gets a position in a fashionable bookstore where Nina also works. She meets several artists who have a studio on the top floor of the building, which they call "The Secret Studio." Rosemary is attracted to Larry Kane, an artist. She goes to a Saturday night party with Nina and her friends and discovers there is some mystery about Nina. Next day, while she is in the studio with an arm about Larry's shoulders, Sloan Whitney, a friend of Larry's, steps in, excuses himself and goes out. Rosemary is greatly embarrassed. Her rich Aunt Kitty comes to stay with the family and takes a fancy to Rosemary. Nina warns Rosemary against seeking out Larry. She gets a box of orchids.

Now go on with the story:

Purple orchids!

As the faint jungle scent swept over her, for an instant she felt her heart throb. Above her, this Sloan Whitney, this man whom she hardly knew. It was as if he were there at her elbow, arrogant

charming.

Exotic flowers. Cruel flowers.

Exotic as he was, exotic, cruel as he was cruel. You couldn't love them as you could the gentle sweeter flower, the little blue

violets and the gold hearted

marigolds that grew in his garden.

You couldn't love him as you had

Phil—sweetly. Or, Larry—warmly, happily.

She caught her breath and set

the flowers down.

"Miss Marton!"

"Yes?" Her voice came from a long distance. Her eyes rested on Mr. Graham's shadowy face.

Heaven, how green-white he was. Like a toadstool that grew in a basement! Compared to Sloan Whitney he looked positively dead.

"Yes?" she said again. Why didn't he speak up? Not that she was interested in anything he could possibly say!

"I won't say that!" Graham's voice was harsh. "I can't have customers sending the clerks. You it doesn't look right. You'll have to explain to Mr. Whitney!"

She bit her lip and looked away.

Looked full into the pale smiling eyes of "Snooky" Graham, whom she hadn't seen since the day he asked her to meet him

on the corner, and she had turned on her heel and crossed the street

leaving him standing.

Would he speak to her?

He came nonchalantly over to the desk, picked up the card that his father had flung angrily into the box.

"Oh, he's rushing you, eh? Well,

that's a pretty note."

He knew Sloan Whitney? Her heart was pounding. A minute ago she had been aflame with the pride of conquest, and now she was like a hunted thing, with old

Mr. Graham glaring at her as if he would like to wrench the purple blooms from her, and Snooky sneering

in his superior, secret way.

The telephone rang. She could answer it—and get away.

But no, old Mr. Graham was quicker. He walked off and left her with Snooky. She closed the box, tied the green string around it with fingers that shook. But she wouldn't ask about Whitney

—no matter how much she wanted to know.

"Yes, I could tell you a lot about that bird. A great hand with the horses and the women.

A young lady I know—Cecilia

Lansing—maybe you've seen her name in the society columns?

Well, Cissie has a wonderful voice

—she'd be in opera if it wasn't for the fine old family name and everything—Classic not to going with him, and her mother, simply put her foot down and said:

Her heart leaped. What was this Snooky was saying? Going with some girl? Then he couldn't be married!

And aloud she said: "Why tell me? It's nothing to me. And, besides, isn't he married?"

Now it was Snooky's turn to shake with inward excitement.

He leaned closer. His voice was low, constrained. "Where did you hear that?"

"Oh, I don't know. It's gutting time. I don't really know."

He saw she didn't, and turned away. "Slong," he said. And say, if you should happen to find out, would you let me know?"

As if she'd let him know—anything. The snip!

"I'd rather have a corsage of orchids from him than a diamond and platinum wedding ring from somebody like Al!"

Just one more peek! She lifted the lid, gently. Why carry them home in the box? Why not wear them? There were two long pins in the box. She pinned them tremblingly to her coat. Well, why not? There could never be any more! She set her mouth grimly. Then enjoy these to the full!

She walked regally, head high, eyes straight ahead. She could see, without really looking down, the purple loveliness at her breast.

She stopped to let a passing car go by. Then a horn honked, insistently. Calling someone. She looked idly toward the curb.

He was calling her! He was roasting. Drawing up to the curb. Beckoning her to come.

She must have crossed the street, got through the traffic somehow, for suddenly he was standing beside her, hat in one hand, came in the corner and she was looking into his dark, half-smiling eyes, whose message she could not read.

"The orchids are beautiful. See, I'm wearing them. But, Mr. Graham would rather—"

Oh, she was putting it so clumsily. He was still smiling. Was he laughing at her? And all the while she was explaining, breathlessly, in little rushes, that he mustn't send her any more.

"But where shall I send them?"

"Mr. Graham said—"

"The devil with Mr. Graham. Haven't you any home? Don't you live some place? You like flowers, you know you do. I like to buy them and I can't send them to myself. I don't know half a dozen people in this town. There's nobody I'd like to send them to half so much." His voice was faintly coaxing. "Come—don't cheat me out of a little pleasure."

And she never knew, not even the next day when she had had time to think it all over, just how she had dared to give him Nina's address as her own. But had, and he had written it carefully in a little black-bound notebook, smiling as he wrote.

THEATRES

ANTLERS THEATRE.

"Millionaires"

"Millionaires," the Warner Bros. production which comes to the Antlers Theatre today for a run of 2 days, is a free adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's book, "The Inevitable Millionaire."

It tells the story of a Jewish tailor who suddenly makes a fortune in stocks and finds himself in for golf, horses, divorces and other uncomfortable luxuries.

George Sidney, once famed as Bizzy Izzy in vaudeville, then the unforgettable Potash of the "Potash and Perlmutter" series, and more recently featured on the screen in "Kosher Kitty Kelly" and "The Cohens and the Kellys," has the leading role, as the tender-hearted tailor who is transported into a world of hard-hearted social striving.

Louise Fazenda, the comedienne who has blazed a bright trail in a long series of Warner pictures, appears as the tailor's flint-headed sister-in-law; a ruthless schemer, who leads the tailor and his wife up the golden rocks.

Vera Gordon, who, since "Haremouge," has been the Jewish mother in every picture for which her services can be obtained, appears once more in her favorite type of role. Only this time, she is not quite so tender as before.

The tailor's wife in this picture is one who gets caught in a whirlwind of social ambition and swept off her feet; who listens to the serpent tongues of other social climbers and decides she must

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

Authorities agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. The kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. Doan's are recommended by many local people. Ask your neighbor!

LIBERTY THEATRE.

Tense Drama in New Frederick Film.

Dedicated to the type of woman represented by Gov. Nellie Ross, of Wyoming, and containing fitting encomiums for the high place woman has reached in our national political life as well as some of the most momentous drama seen in a decade, "Her Honor The Governor," F. B. O.'s long heralded special production starring Pauline Frederick, was shown at the Liberty Theatre yesterday and more than lived up to the glowing reputation that has preceded it.

"Her Honor The Governor" deals with the difficulties which come to Adele Fenway, when she assumes the gubernatorial chair in her state. Political chicanery, the harrasing of crooked bosses and other more or less well-understood elements combine to work into a smashing situation where her only son, Bob Fenway, is accused and convicted of murder, putting squarely up to his mother the responsibility for pardoning him. Rugged dramatic meat, this—topped off by the withdrawal of all her power to save her son through impeachment proceedings which have been going on in the legislature as the trial of the boy progresses in the court room.

OBITUARY

Dickson M. Reding passed away November 23 at Mercy Hospital, where he underwent an operation several days before his death. Mr. Reding was born in Joplin, Mo., June 6, 1887. With his parents and twin brother, Lee, he came to Douglas county in 1911, settling at Dillard, since that time making his home there.

On July 23, 1921 he was married to Zella Schlar, who with a daughter, Juanita, aged 4 years, and a son, Benton, aged 2 years, survive him. His mother, Mrs. Carrie Reding, of Dillard also survives. Funeral services were held at the Roseburg Undertaking Chapel November 25, 1926, and the Masonic lodge conducted the service at the grave.

Mr. Reding was greatly respected and loved in the community in which he lived. He was never too busy to cheerfully leave his own work to assist others who came to him for help. His many friends deeply sympathize with his family in their bereavement.

ROCKNE RELIES ON BACKFIELD SHIFT TO BEAT TROJANS

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 1.—Only one team this fall has been able to withstand the shift attack of the eleven man backfield of the Notre Dame football squad, but in their tenth game of the season at Los Angeles next Saturday against the University of Southern California some of the drive may be lacking, according to their coach, Knute Rockne.

At the top of their form, none but the Minnesota battering ram was able to cross the Notre Dame goal line. The boys were mentally tired out when they succumbed to Carnegle Teel, Rockne said. Whether the week's rest from practice has revived them, the Trojans will find out Saturday afternoon.

Under Rockne's system of interchanging backfields, no one back has stood out much above his fellows. Four of his eleven back carriers are dangerous open field runners. Four others are of the line smashing type, and there are three quarterbacks almost equally qualified for running the play and tossing passes. The greatest weakness of the team this year has been the lack of a good punter.
