Lunch Hour
Notice

Tomorrow when you are at lunch, notice the clothing on people close by. Men from all lines and ranks of business are equal at lunchtime—also, all men wear clothes, but not all men appear the same in them. Successful men—and those on the way up, change to a refreshed suit each week. It's good business for them.

The SECRET STUDIO

By Hazel Livingston

CHAPTER 57.
The Story So Far.
Rosemary Merton, determined to win independence of her family, quits college, following a romance with Philip Haines, a neighborhood sweetheart. Clerking in a bookstore she meets Larry, an artist, and Sloan Whitney, a man of the world, by whom she is fascinated. She breaks with Larry. Nina, employed in the same store, goes to Spain to join Stanley Cuyler, an old friend of her dead father, and married. Rosemary is given the use of her luxurious apartment. Mrs. Merton dies. Rosemary encounters Whitney, after an estrangement, and he tells her he cannot marry her, but asks her to go abroad with him. She asks time to think it over. She discovers Whitney is drinking habitually and breaks with him. He disappears. Cuyler's wife, mistaking Rosemary for Nina, menaces her with a revolver and drops dead of apoplexy in Rosemary's apartment. Rosemary is held two days in prison. She is discharged from her position and seeks another. A cable from Nina says she and Cuyler are married. Phil returns, asking her to marry him. She refuses, thinking of her love for Whitney.

Now Go On With the Story.
Gertie opened the door for them. For a moment she stood motionless in the hallway, her face working nervously. Then she held out her arms to Rosemary.
"To have you back again, lovely—to see you coming in with Phil—I can't realize it! It's so like old time—and still so different!" And she wiped her eyes with the corner of her apron, smiling through her tears, the way she used to do.

Rosemary smiled tremulously. She was thinking about their last meeting in the little whitewashed room, with the high barred window. "I'm sorry I was so nasty—the other day."
Gertie turned her head away, struggling for composure. She was still hurt. She couldn't understand it—the way Rosemary had talked to them when she and Al had come to help her.
"I—I didn't know what I was doing that day. I was so worried."

"Oh, Gertie understands. Don't you, Gert? Don't go into all that! Move out of the way, Gert—I've got a box to get in—these women and their luggage!" Phil banged the suitcase down and put his free arm around Rosemary, pushing Rosemary along with him.
"Where's Al? When's dinner going to be ready? I'm starved."
Phil was rushing them over the new wardrobe, making it seem natural and nice to have Rosemary back.
"Come, take off your things," Gertie said, more naturally. "You can leave them in my room for a while. You won't mind sleeping on the davenport in the front room?"

"Hello, no! How are you?" Phil was wringing Al's hand. Al got up from the rocking chair where he had been reading the paper, and shook hands with both of them. His face was unnaturally red, and he didn't have much to say to Rosemary. He was willing to put up with a lot from Gertie's relations, but he felt this was rather overdoing things.
Rosemary felt his antagonism. All through dinner she stole little glances at him, watching him eat stolidly, a disgruntled fat man in shirt sleeves.
And Gertie watched him furtively, too, pushing her hair back nervously with the back of her hand. "She's my sister—but I've got my husband to think of," she was thinking. "I can't have my home upset, even for her!"
They were starting on the tapaca pudding before Rosemary remembered Pa. He wasn't there!
"Why—where's Pa?" she asked, ashamed. Surely he wasn't sick—Gertie would have told her—and yet he never went out—
"Oh, he's all right. Al, dear, a

SKIING CONTEST TO BE HELD AT FT. KLAMATH FEB. 22

FT. KLAMATH, Jan. 21.—Hardy timbermen, loggers, trappers, and those who in the winter months find their only mode of transportation in the snow-covered hills of this vicinity on skis will vie with each other, next Washington's birthday for supremacy of the snows, when prizes totaling several hundred dollars will be distributed to the skiers who are able to traverse the tortuous trail between here and Crater Lake lodges a distance of 21 miles, in the shortest length of time.
While complete plans have not been formulated, it is known that the ski race will be the major event of an entire day devoted to winter sports, and eight men and one girl have already signified their intention of competing for the prizes.

Heading the list of entrants is Andy Varsto, giant Swede, who stands six feet one inch in his stocking feet, and weighs 191 pounds. Varsto has been roaming the Cascades for more than ten years coming from Wisconsin where his prowess on skis brought him many medals and a jumping record of 267 feet, 10 inches. Skiing comes as second nature to this Scandinavian for in his native land when but a boy necessity forced him to use this mode of travel. Since that time he has made his home in mountainous countries where his early training stood him in good stead. Now, running a trap line in the winter time, provides his living, and trips that take weeks at a time are necessary to reach his traps. With the snow piled high in ravines, and on mountain sides, skis are essential to his business success.

Local enthusiasts are already wagering a winter's wage that Andy will be winner in the event, while still others who claim to be capable judges, are scanning the entry list, with a bit of skepticism, preferring to wait until more is known of some of those who have declared their intention to compete in the holiday event.

Eat barbecue sandwiches and live forever. Brand's Road Stand.
of fact, I have a pretty fine position—
Phil paused to accept Al's proffered light. He still yearned to soak Al—just once—behind the ear. In his mind's eye he pictured him tipping over, the walrus! But he didn't want to fight with Rosemary's family.
So they moved into the front room together, smoking each other's cigars, thinking their own thoughts, outwardly friendly.

And in the kitchen Gertie and Rosemary stacked dishes.
"Lovey—I'm so glad you're going to marry Phil!"
"Maybe I'm not."
"Maybe you're not!" Gertie sat down weakly. "Oh, Rosemary, I don't know what to make of you! And it's so hard on me—to have all this now—in my condition and all!"
Rosemary held the dish she was drying in midair. "Why, Gertie, I didn't know—I never thought!"
All the old love, all the old tenderness for Gertie came rushing back to her heart. She went to her shyly and kissed her flushed cheek. "Gertie—why didn't you tell me?"
But Gertie drew away irritably. "How could I? You were so full of your own affairs. You haven't been to see me for months. You wouldn't be here now if that fellow hadn't got tired of you and gone off. And now you say maybe you won't marry Phil!"
She began to cry nervously. "After all he's done for you! And all we've done for you! I should think you'd be ashamed to be so foolish. You don't know what you are doing—you can't refuse him now—why, you'll break his heart!"

Flashes of Life

NEW YORK—One secret of Willie Hoppe's success seems to have been revealed. He studied billiards from the days of Cleopatra to Coolidge. Anyhow, he is to give a radio lecture on that topic, describing not only Anthony's games with his charmer, but how kings of Ireland used brass cues and balls.
