NO WONDER MAN IS CYNICAL ABOUT WOMAN— HE DOESN'T LIKE HER OUT OF HER CORNER

By Olive Roberts Barton

I have had on my desk since last fall an article written by our friend H. G. Wells.

I don't know what to do with it because it was like a cat's paw padded with plushy words that rubbed you the right way when you read it but left a scratch that smarted afterward.

The article is amusing cynical. He says women are not as important to men as they think they are. He says meaner things than that—that the market is overstocked and there are too many beautiful women; that women are superfluous and incidental in a man's life, and no woman ever inspired a man to do anything!

One reason why I have kept the article, without comment long ere this, was my desire for proof. Were all men becoming cynics on the woman question?

As a woman I wished to know, and I have observed other women and other men in the meantime.

I believe men are becoming cynical regarding women, and I am going to venture a comment that the wonder is they are not more cynical than they are.

For woman in a general way now seems to be at the trying stage of endeavoring to step out of the corner that man for centuries has crowded her into, or so she feels, and she has had to do a bit of fighting. She has had to cast aside her most alluring characteristic, charm, and don the habiliments of war.

Charm is still there, for woman is innately and eternally feminine, but it is put behind her, out of the way, so to speak, temporarily, while she does battle.

Men are naturally resentful. They liked her in her corner.

Out in the middle of the floor she disturbs them, particularly with all her claws out. Once they learn that she is there to stay and are willing to move over a bit to give her room, she will be all purry puss again. She can afford then to be her old sweet self.

This trying period is only temporary, I repeat. In the meantime men have reason to be cynical. There is no rebuke coming to them from me. I am even going to cheer a bit, for who likes a man who won't die fighting? However, we don't want them to try "quits."

I believe the most militant feminism is over. In a few years no doubt you will find us with lace mitts, ruffles, and water-falls. Clothes are the barometer of woman's attitude—the victorious soldier loves plumes, and he can be very gentle.

The following was written by Annie Kruse of Yoncalla in memory of her friend, Mary Goodell Burt, who died recently:

MARY

She walked among the lowly,
And her hands were roughened
By the many things she had to do
For those she loved.
But her voice was low and sweet
As a silver bell, and when she spoke
Seeming the very spirit of melody.
Her lovely charm was there,
And when she sang it touched the heart,
She walked with those—high places;
Her calm and gracious air
Shone like the bloom on ripened grain,
And to all who came, each felt,
"She is my friend, she singles me alone
For her regard," and the best was none
Too high for her approval.
With sorrow life touched her hair,
With tears her face, with pains her body,
But left her spirit free,
And now she walks with God.

APACHE TRAIL

Where beauty dwells, I walk
They call it Apache Trail
The home of my age'd Earth-father,
Big Chief "Coyote-Trail."

Where beauty dwells in colors
Painted by Sky-Father's hand
Love pouring from His big heart
When painting Indian's land.

I walk where soft blue mountains
Encompass me about
Where deep red walls, and ancient cliffs
Put Indians fears to rout.

I walk where beauty rises before the dawn of day
Where beauty lingers longest
After the sun's last ray.

Where beauty dwells I walk,
Paint from great artists' hand
Is lavished with abundance
O'er this, the Indian's land.

BORAH FAILS IN PLAN TO VISIT STRIFE REGION

Own Committee Averse to Journey to Nicaragua and Mexico.

Coolidge Asserts Nothing Wrong About Action of England Dispatching Cruiser to Aid.

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—Senator Borah's proposal to have the foreign relations committee authorized to visit Mexico and Nicaragua this summer was squelched today by the committee itself.

After hearing several state department officials sent by Secretary Kellogg to give the committee the administration's latest information about Mexico and Nicaragua, the committee members decided to eliminate from Senator Borah's pending resolution the clause authorizing a tour abroad.

As revised, however, the resolution still would permit the committee to sit during the congressional recess and hear witnesses. Senator Borah, who is the committee chairman, was directed to poll the committee during the day to determine whether a favorable report on the amended resolution could be made to the senate.

WASHINGTON, Feb 26—Mindful that British and Italian subjects, as well as Americans, have suffered property losses in the Nicaraguan disturbance, President Coolidge believes there is no room for protest against the British action in sending a warship to Corinto as a possible refuge for English nationals in that country.

The President's position, made known at the White House yesterday, is that under the present circumstances the British step can be considered as no more than an ordinary precaution that might be taken by any country, although it is unusual for a European nation to adopt such measures in connection with Latin-American affairs.

No Landing Planned

There is quite a difference it was pointed out, between sending a warship for moral effect or for possible evacuation of foreign settlements, and the more decisive action of landing naval forces to enforce debt or similar settlements, which the Washington government has consistently opposed in southern countries. The British government has advised the United States that no such landing operations were contemplated in Nicaragua.

President Coolidge regards the recent extension of American landing operations in Nicaragua as an effort to insure foreigners generally against further damage to their property. No estimate of the foreign property loss was made at the White House, but President Diaz, Conservative, who is opposed in a war being waged to unseat him by Juan Sacasa, Liberal, in a communication to the Nicaraguan legation here, said claims of foreigners and Nicaraguans for such damages would reach between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—Congress is coming into the home stretch to the accompaniment of increasing demands in the senate to kill the filibustering habit with cloture and threats of a general legislative filibuster in the house which thus far has escaped such delaying tactics.

Meanwhile, President Coolidge, has hit a fast stride in disposing of those bills that have successfully squeezed through the legislative jam and is expected to act on several others of importance.

Three petitions to limit debate on as many measures are now pending in the senate, the third being filled yesterday by Senator Lenroot, Republican, Wisconsin, in an effort to ward off an impending attack by Senator McKellar, Democrat, Tennessee, on the $125,000,000 public buildings bill. Under the rules it cannot be voted on until Monday.

The other moves to invoke cloture are directed against efforts to prevent votes on the Swing-Johnson Boulder Canyon dam and the Tyson emergency officers retirement bills.

Holdup Threatened

Further filibustering is in prospect for the senate if Senator Reed, Democrat, Missouri, carries out his threat that unless resolution to prolong the life of his campaign funds investigation committee is passed "there will be no business transacted here this session." His warning was given yesterday when Senator Reed, Republican, Pennsylvania, objected to immediate consideration of the resolution, which is now scheduled for debate next Tuesday.

Representative Laguardia, Republican, New York, has served notice in the house that unless the Boulder Canyon dam bill is brought to a vote he will delay action on all other legislation. The house steering committee has indicated it will not be taken up until disposed of in the senate.

Flashes of Life

If this century-old bill, due from the English, were to be paid, it is calculated the amount, compounded, would provide a fortune of about a hundred million francs for every man, woman and child in the heroic city of Verdun.

One periodical suggests the collection of the debt ought to be pressed and used as an offset against what Britain claims from France for the loans of the last war.

The new debt, or rather the old one, dates beck to the Napoleonic wars. Several hundred British were interned in Verdun during those troublous days from 1803 to 1814. The prisoners were of the upper classes and entertained lavishly. Their credit was good and after they were gone the French authorities discovered the debts they neglected to settle amounted to 183,534,875 francs. Mathematicians have computed that compound interest would run this up to the hundred million mark for every inhabitant of Verdun, counting the debt in gold and its value today in paper money.

Review of New Legislation Shows Auto Code Most Affected; Primary and School Laws Resist Attacks

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

SALEM, Ore., Feb. 26.—Governor I. L. Patterson's measures went through the legislature in entirety, except the tithing measure and his proposal for creation of a separate automobile department.

Among desires realized by the governor is the measure providing for the appointment of a superintendent of the state penitentiary by the board of control; a bill authorizing the governor to name a state budget officer; and one creating a central purchasing agency.

Included in automobile legislation passed by the legislature are the Hoover rules of the road which motor associations are seeking to have adopted throughout the union.

Among the provisions in the code is one eliminating all the various signs made by a motorist to designate the turn or move he contemplates. Under the new law, the motorist simply holds out his hand whereupon it devolves upon another driver to watch the former's movements and to act accordingly. It also compels one to come to a complete stop on entering a primary highway.

The speed limit is raised from thirty to thirty-five miles an hour by another section.

The legislature also repealed the anti-movable spotlight and 21-candle power law. Under the newly enacted sections, two movable spotlights are permited and those who wish may use 32 candle power headlights. The requirement is made that a spotlight while a car is moving shall be focused to fall on the right hand side of an imaginary line protected ahead from the middle of the machine.

The certificate of title law was amended to remove certain objections that have been held against it.

Moves of the motor stage and truck line operators to change the basis of taxing such public carriers failed. The law remains substantially as it was enacted by the 1925 session and approved by the people on referendum.

The legislature removed the assessment of 50 per cent additional fee against commercial salesmen's automobiles and provided for refunding such fees charged for licenses in 1927. It also provided for the placing of the "anywhere for hire" class in a special group to pay 50 per cent additional license fee. Such machines were formerly taxed under the provisions applicable to stages and trucks operated between fixed terminals.

Other Legislation

All attacks on the direct primary, initiative and referendum laws was resisted. Even the move to do away with the voters' candidate pamphlet was deefated.

Only minor changes were made in the forestry code. One provision raises the pay of the state forester from $3600 to $4200 a year, through permitting the state forestry board to pay him an extra $600 out of federal moneys coming to the state every year.

The house killed Representative James Motts' measure providing for a reforestation program. Mott intends to make a fight for the same bill next year.

With the exception of the divorce of the real estate department from the insurance commissioner's office, no vital insurance legislation was enacted.

All inroads on the workmen's compensation law were successfully resisted.

All efforts to change the fundamental school laws were defeated. The principal changes were sought in bills introduced by Senator Eddy and Representative MacPherson to reorganize the state board of education.

The proposal of compulsory automobile liability insurance was voted down.

Two laws passed cover the major work in irrigation legislation. One provides for the organization
