Death strikes Garrett Folsom while bathing at Ocean Town, N. C.

After being perfectly examined by a doctor, the body is brought to the Hotel Majasaca, where an inquiry is started.

Folsom's bathing companions had been Roger Neville, Mrs. Helma Barnaby, and Carmelita Valdora.

It is established that Folsom, just before his death, had been standing next to Ned Barron, known as the copper king.

Then the startling announcement is made that Folsom had been stabbed to death in the water.

His valet, is questioned, as are Barron and his wife, but no

"What about other servants?"

"They are all at our home in Chicago."

"My lawyer receives bequests under Mr. Folsom's will?"

"Two or three do. But they are small legacies. Oh, the servants are out of the question."

"Who does benefit by the will?"

"Only myself, Mr. Pelton; my nephew, and Mr. Roger Neville. We each get about one-third of Gar-

ANTLERS THEATRE

"The Red Kimono"

Mrs. Wallace Reid's startling picture, "The Red Kimono," which is said to be an amazing vivid portrayal of the almost hopeless struggle for redemption of delinquent girls, opens at the Antlers Theatre tonight for a limited engagement. Mrs. Reid's purpose in making this picture was to impress forcibly upon parents, especially mothers, some of the dangers that confront their growing daughters. In order that women may give it subject their undivided attention she has directed that matinee performances be for women only, and that children shall not be admitted to any showing unless accompanied by parents.

The picture, dealing as it does with the white slave evil was passed by the Motion Picture Commission of New York State, and by the National Board of Review, without change or elimination, which was a distinct tribute to Mrs. Reid's high purpose in making it, for it was no easy task to tell the story of a modern Magdalen in such a way as to impress the moral and yet not offend anyone. "The Red Kimono" is probably one of the most daring pictures that has ever been filmed and yet it is a production that every mother should see and that her daughter should see with her.

LIBERTY THEATRE

Can a man love a girl who cleverer than himself? Opinion may differ on this subject, but provides the theme for Leatrice Joy's new star picture, "The Holy Vine," which is at the Liberty for the last time to day. However, the clever girl, portrayed by Miss Joy, finds that while she is super-efficient in business, she has much to learn about the romance of love. Her education is completed by Tom Moore, who plays the masculine lead.

The metamorphosis of Miss Joy from a mannish, executive business girl into a romantic "climber vine" provides material for an excellent plot. Robert Edison, Tom Claude, Dell Henderson and Sam Edwards are included in Miss Joy's supporting cast.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

Victor McLaglen, who plays the role of "Hercules" in Tod Browning's "The Unholy Three," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production now being shown at the Majestic theatre, is a Canadian and character actor in British films. McLaglen played the lead in the picture he appeared in in England and was leading man with Lady Diana Manners in the Studio Blackton production, "The Glorious Adventure."

His "Call of the Road" is said to be the greatest money-maker he has ever been produced in in England. Other members of "The Holy Three" cast are: Lon Chaney, Mae Busch, Matt Moore, Harry Earle and Mathew Betz.

NEW YORK—Almea Semples-Pheeron has got an idea from a great white way. An electric sign, 70 feet long, is to hang 150 feet in the air between the towers of her radio station in Los Angeles.

LONDON—Floods in England have been causing real hardships. The Prince of Wales and Princess Henry were hunted under worse conditions. Their horses sank their top and 50 huntsmen in their attempt were unseated.

BALTIMORE—The B. & O. has made great progress in a century. At an anniversary banquet New N. D. Baker recalled that there is a race between the road's first locomotive and a horse. The horses won.

NEW YORK—Vermont's loss in the nation's gall. Lieutenant Governor Hollister, at a banquet, a Vermont Society here said the sister of the dead man, arrives and takes command. At the request it is established that the dead weapon was a pichag, an Oriental knife, and that it and its scabbard had been purchased on the boardwalk.

Some suspicion attaches to one Troydon Sears, who is a collector of curious bladed weapons, and Anastasia said Titus Riggs, an architect, to try to solve the murder.

Now go on to work the story:

CHAPTER XX.

"That's all right, then," said Anastasia Folsom to Riggs, "We'll waste no more time over it just now. First of all, have you the slightest idea of any individual whom you consider responsible for my brother's death?"

"No, I haven't, except to say that my one near him in the ocean that morning might be the murderer."

"But we can't hale to court all the bathers in the ocean at that time. We must get at it some other way."

"And perhaps the logical way is through the motive."

"Now that's a sensible remark you loved your brother, and I exclude Mr. Pelton because you tell me he was in New York at the time, that leaves only Mr. Neville to be discussed. What about him?"

"I can't believe Roger Neville killed Garrett—I've no reason to think he did—but that is one of the things we must find out. As you know, the man who did kill him must be some one who knew him and for some reason wanted to put him out of the way. Now I know of no reason for Roger Neville desiring Garrett's death, why I suppose that side of it must be looked into."

"She suspects Neville," Titus Riggs assured himself, but aloud he said:

"That's right, Miss Folsom. We must view it from every angle. Had your brother any romance in his life? Especially any unhappy one?"

"Not to my knowledge," she replied, after a moment's hesitation. "He may have had. There again, is a road to be followed."

"Yes, certainly. Now—but I'm sure Mr. Folsom was in no way financially embarrassed or waiting for money."

"Well it's been investigated. I'm not unreasonable, Mr. Riggs. I don't expect you to work miracles. But I do want you to use your common sense. I want you to find some detectives do, and work with me and see if we can succeed."

"I'll do that. I accept your proposition, Miss Folsom, and we'll leave your very generous offer as to salary open for the time being. When I prove to be of some real use to you then we can talk of remuneration. I know, as well as you do, that it seems absurd for a man to try to detect work without any training or experience of any sort. But you can also employ skilled detectives, and if I fall down on the job they may be able to carry on."

"I shan't call in any one else until I see how you get on. But, of course, if the police continue the search I shall be interested. As the hotel detective here is rather clever sort. And rest assured I shall not be idle myself. I may not be able to do a man's work, but there are kinds of detection where a woman's intuition and quiet cleverness may be of service."

"That is certainly so. Now, first of all, Miss Folsom, I want a footman to Mr. Folsom's luggage and wardrobe."

(To be continued.)

Folsom's nephew arrives on the scene, and more is learned about the strange dolls in the dead man's room. Read the next chapter.

FARM NEWS.

STATE MARKET AGENT'S LETTER.

Seymour Jones of Marion county has been appointed state market agent by Governor Patterson, succeeding C. E. Spence who resigned. Mr. Spence underwent a major operation early in January. Mr. Jones resides on a farm near Sale and has been many years busily and actively engaged in cooperative movements and grange work. He will have his main office in Sale and will head the weights and measures department, taking over the duties of W. A. Dalziel, present chief deputy.

The Increasing Overhead

Transportation and distributable costs of farm products continue upwards. Ocean freight rates to Europe are constantly being raised until the surplus crops of this country are now going abroad with increased costs so great that realization of the farmer's share of the top of this handicap is the growing distribution costs of products from our large cities—the many middle-handlings and costs brought about largely by the small quantity

"Now, now, dear lady, I make full allowance for the devotion of an affectionate sister but you must idealize the man."

"I don't idealize him," said Titus Riggs, "because one who knew him will tell you the same. He was a remarkable man—a man of a thousand!"

Titus Riggs had heard much about Garrett Folson since the unfortunate man's death, and most of what he had heard was greatly at variance with his sister's opinions.

He felt a hesitancy about disturbing her delay too readily.

So he only said:

"It stands to reason, Miss Folson, that somebody must have looked upon your brother with a less kindly eye than your own. Unless Mr. Folson was killed by mistake."

"Do you think that probable?" asked the girl.

"I don't know. Though it is possible. But if we're to follow the truth we can't depend on innuendo or vague suppositions. We must get down to facts. To true evidence and proved testimony."

"That's just it! And Anastasia's face brightened. "But, so far as I can see, we have no evidences and no proof of any account."

"That's pretty nearly true. First of all, what about the man, Rossi?"

"He is absolutely untrustworthy."

"Absolutely. I wish, in one way, I could suspect Rossi. I mean if I would be a logical way to look at it he can't possibly be at fault. He is utterly respectable and quiet-lived; he has always been devoted to Garrett's well-being, and he is in all respects, I deem, served, with no underhand ways or ulterior motives."

"Does he gain anything from Mr. Folson's will?"

"There is a bequest to him of a thousand dollars. But that would never tempt him to murder his master, for I happen to know Rossi has a good-sized bank account of Carloaders of farm produce are almost everywhere the market is broken into smaller lots by wholesalers for the jobbers; again broken into smaller lots for retailers who once more reduce them for the consuming trade. Where twenty years ago a family would buy a sack of flour, now two-pound sacks are in demand. All this extra service is added to the cost of production between the farmer and the kitchen, and that the price to the consumer may not be prohibitive the price at the farm must be low. The department of agriculture states that in New York City the standard retail sales of farm products is about 25 cents for each kind of product, of which 14 cents is the wholesale value delivered in the city.

All Crops Look Good

From nearly all counties of Oregon come reports of very favorable conditions for nearly everything the state produces. Winter grain crops are promising and where some localities have had local damage to peaches and other crops, in general the outlook is very favorable. Eastern Oregon has plenty of rain and so for the wheat crop and there has been very little winter damage to fall seeded wheat fields.

Enormous Farm Investment

From 1909 to 1929 the value of farm lands in the United States increased 120 per cent. In 1909 it increased so much that twelve times. Since 1929 values have declined. If this giant industry was generally prosperous, farmers could make fair returns for investment and labor, the United States would go yet higher as the outstanding nation of the world. Of this situation R. W. Dunlap, a leading authority on agriculture in the United States, in a recent speech at Jacksonville, Ill., said that never before had agriculture been placed at such a disadvantage with industry, commerce and labor and that the total value of farm crops for last year was over a
