MANY FOREST TELEPHONE LINES ARE BEING BUILT

A total of 386 miles of telephone line was built in the 22 national forests of Oregon and Washington during 1926. Of this total, 299 miles were built in Oregon and 177 miles in Washington, as shown in a statement just issued by the district forester, Portland, Oregon. The telephone is an important tool in protecting the national forests from fire; speed in reporting fires being one of the first requirements is fully recognized by the government foresters. The entire forest service telephone system in the North Pacific district now embraces 9,423 miles of line—6,156 miles in Oregon and 3,267 miles in Washington. The total construction cost of the system to date is $639,192. Forest fire look-outs on the mountain peaks and rangers, guards and patrolmen in the valleys below are connected by this system, which is built primarily to speed up action on forest fires.

In addition to the regular telephone, road and trail crews and large fire camps are connected, where possible, by means of army emergency wire and portable telephones. Many of the lines are known as "tree lines," built under pioneer conditions and considerable ingenuity is at times required in their construction and maintenance. It is said, many tools, special porcelain hangers, tree nails and other devices have been worked out or invented by the federal foresters to fit the special woods conditions under which these lines must be built and maintained.

EMILIE LANCEL TO BE HEARD IN CONCERT MONDAY, APRIL 4

Miss Emilie Lancel, mezzo-soprano, is to be heard in Roseburg, Monday, April 4 in the last of the series of concerts sponsored by the Douglas County Music Teachers' Association and the Helpline Conservatory. The concert is to be given at the M. E. Church. Miss Lancel filled a number of engagements on the Pacific Coast last season. She was heard in concert in Los Angeles and in San Francisco and appeared before several leading musical clubs of California. The critics of Portland were the first to acclaim her in the Northwest; they unanimously declared her an artist of merit and granted her many excellent qualities. Perhaps Dr. Emil Ems summed it all up in a few words when he wrote for the "Portland News":

"Emilie Lancel is a mezzo-soprano with personality, poise, technique, lovely quality and coloring." On the same tour, December 1925, Miss Lancel was heard in Portland as soloist for the "MacDowell Club" and in Tacoma with the "Orpheus Club."

During this present tour, Miss Lancel will be heard again in Portland and will moreover fill engagements in Walla Walla, Lewiston, Pullman, Spokane, Hoquiam and Bellingham.

LIBERTY THEATRE

"The Music Master," which has been showing to capacity audiences at the Liberty Theatre will have its final presentation tonight. This great screen version of the famous Belasco-Warfield stage success was directed by Allan Dwan with Lois Moran, Alec B. Francis and Neil Hamilton in the featured roles. The scenario was written by Charles Klein, son of the author of the stage play.

ANTLERS THEATRE.

If, as the wise men say, "adversity breeds greatness," then according to Douglas MacLean, his latest Paramount comedy, "Let It Rain," showing for the last time today at the Antlers ought to be a howling success.

Douglas claims he was only fooling when he called the picture "Let It Rain" but the weather man took him seriously. Listen: "Our first leading lady was caught in the rain—tonight's new leading lady," says MacLean. "The company went to San Diego, where Summer spends the winter," on location and it rained for eight consecutive days. When the weather cleared, Eddie Cline, our director, was in bed with a cold—wet feet. Cameraman slipped on a rain-soaked dock and went overboard with a three thousand dollar camera. The cameraman came up, camera went down and it took a naval diver twelve hours to find it. Property boy, driving to San Diego, skidded on wet pavement, wrecked his car and broke arm. Just because we called our picture, "Let It Rain."

Shirley Mason heads Mr. MacLean's supporting cast in this merry tale of the United States Marines.
