WHICH WAY IS RIGHT?

Who has the right slant on big business—Henry Ford or the General Motors corporation? Ford has followed his own course and has been enormously successful. General Motors has followed an opposite course and has gained a success nearly as spectacular. Which one is right? Ford's way is to keep all of the stock in his own hands. His aides are all salaried men; not one (with, of course, the exception of his son Edsel) shares in the business as a stockholder. Let the company grow to be a veritable Colossus, as it has—Ford remains the central figure, one might almost say the only important figure. General Motors has followed another plan. It believes that by leading its workers to share in profits it will gain in efficiency and effectiveness. Accordingly, in 1923 it set aside more than half a million shares of stock to be divided among 80 executives. Those executives are now millionaires. Furthermore, it is announced that this plan will be extended to younger officers. General Motors is proud of this record. It is proud of the wide distribution of its stock, proud of the fact that it is making rich men out of its employees. Here, then, we have two diametrically opposite systems. Ford's plan glorifies the central figure and submerges the others. General Motors reverses it. Which scheme is right? Which one is more likely to become the standard for large American industries? That, of course, is a hard question to answer. Perhaps one might say that both are right. For, however you look at it, you must admit that both Ford and General Motors are wondrously successful.

It was a very timely address that Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union, delivered the other night at the annual convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It was so good that we're going to quote a short excerpt here. Think it over and see if you don't think he was right. "I want to congratulate you," said Dr. Rowe, "on the great national service which you are performing in emphasizing the duties of patriotism as well as its rights. You are bringing home to the younger generation the outstanding fact that the great power and far-reaching influence exercised by our country carries with it heavy responsibilities and obligations. We must not lull ourselves to sleep with the thought that we are immune from the possibility of abusing that power. It is a significant fact, which we should never lose sight of, that inaction is quite as far-reaching in its consequences as positive action."

Public schools in twelve American cities this fall will experiment with moving pictures as educational aids. Some 40 moving pictures for use in the fourth, fifth and sixth grades in the study of geography, elementary science and hygiene will be shown. School authorities will check the results very carefully, to see just how effective these films are in comparison with the old methods of study. This is well worth doing. To one who is not a teacher it seems as if the movie ought to be a magnificent way of getting little Johnny to learn things that leave him absolutely cold when he studies about them in books. We'll await the results of this experiment with considerable interest.

Now they have phonographs that change their own records and play hours without stopping. They'd better not try to play ours without stopping. If these machines could play two or three different tunes at once they'd be almost as good as the radio. There's one untold solution to the broadcasting station problem. Put them in the hands of the receivers. Some radio entertainers play on the ordinary saw. Listeners could suggest a new use for the ordinary ax. They say there are still thousands of saxophone players. But there are so many thousands who are not still. If all the saxophones in the United States were placed end to end they would not fill Lake Michigan. But many are in favor of trying it.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, adds his voice to the indorsement of the annual "Buddy Poppy" sale of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Proceeds of this sale, as everybody knows, go to disabled and needy ex-service men. It is regrettable that in some quarters there has been dissension about this sale. America has no duty higher than the duty of caring for its wounded soldiers. It is a task that cannot be shirked; if the sale of Buddy Poppies helps, let's buy 'em, by all means.

Medical experts have found a way to make X-ray movies. Now we will be able to see the villain's heart sinking into his boots.

A religious magazine says there are 526,000,000 Christians in the world, but neglected to say where they are hiding.

Maybe the reason the United States takes so little interest in the rest of the world is because it takes so little out.

Paris has a newspaper that deals solely with sensational robberies. America has menus.

Preacher of Dissenters Says New Church Must Be Kept Unswayed
by Scandal.

(Associated Press Local Wire)
LOS ANGELES, April 25.—Discord among followers of Aimee McPherson, which reached a climax last week in a revolt with her congregation, is attributed by Gledwyn Nichols, the evangelist's former musical director and leader of the dissenting faction, to a "spirit of worldliness at Angelus Temple."

Nichols has been elected pastor of an independent church formed at Glendale Saturday night by former members of the Angelus Temple band and choir, who "walked out" in a body following the director's resignation.

The group of dissenters held their first services as an independent church at Glendale yesterday. About two hundred persons attended the morning service. The attendance was doubled at the night meeting.

The tenets of the new religious movement were outlined by Nichols, who preached the opening sermon and declared that those who had broken away from the Angelus Temple would never return.

"We have only the kindest feelings for Sister McPherson and all connected with the temple," Nichols explained, "but if they will read again the declaration of faith on which the church of the Four Square Gospel was founded and adhere to it they will strip themselves of their worldly ornamentation and put on the sackcloth and ashes of real repentance."

The insurgents were told that their new church must remain "unsullied by scandal or innuendo," and that it would never center its activities around "one personality." He admonished the women of his congregation to "dress quietly" and not wear gold and jewels.

Mrs. McPherson carried on at Angelus Temple yesterday with a new choir and an improvised orchestra. The musicians were absent at the morning service but had been assembled for the evening meeting. Fred A. Handquist, Nichols' successor, directed the music.

Other than to explain that the orchestra had been "scraped up," the evangelist made no reference to the rift in the temple.

CHURCH ISSUE WELCOMED BY
NELLIE T. ROSS

Individual upon the principle that all men are endowed with certain inalienable rights that no power on earth, church or state can take away. He stood likewise for religious freedom; that these in America are entitled to worship their creator as they please and shall suffer no loss of civil rights thereby. He stood for the education of the masses.

"These are the principles upon which the democratic party was founded. It is charged that we have receded from them. Constantly, we hear it said that party activities are no longer based on principles; that neither of the parties is standing for values that are vital to the people.

"If this be true, and it is more true than we like to admit, let us democrats stand up in the might that universal enfranchisement has given to us and demand that our party shall stand for something; that it shall return to the great tenets upon which it was founded.

"I am a democrat because I believe in my heart in the traditional principles of the democratic party. I am not afraid of the amplification of any of those principles to modern problems, even to religious controversy, which properly has no place in the politics of this country.

Religious Issue Forecast.

"It looks now as if a leading issue that is going to face us as democrats this coming year is whether or not a Catholic can be nominated to the presidency by the democratic party. It is an issue that cannot be dodged or evaded. Distasteful as it is to us all, it will have to be brought out into the open.

"Whatever may be our religious creed, this is an issue that challenges our democracy. To many it will be and is an acid test.

"I hope that the democratic women of this country will not be found wanting but that they will fearlessly proclaim, individually and from every political assembly wherever they may be gathered, that they will sanction no policy that deprives any person in the United States of the full rights and privileges of citizenship because of religious affiliation."

Tax Increase Stowing.

Tax increases are heavy this year, compared with last year, but are at a slightly less rate of increase. The main increases, as usual, are in taxes for county and local purposes. Last year these taxes increased 7.55 per cent over the year before. This year the increase has moderated to 6.91 per cent—a slight moderation, it is true, but encouraging because it is a moderation.

Seven counties show a decrease in county and local taxes this year. Last year only five counties were able to make a reduction.

Educators this year are taking a less proportion of the total tax dollar, while the government of cities and towns is requiring a heavier proportion. The increase in educational taxes this year is at a less rate of increase than has prevailed for several years, indicating that school taxes may be tending towards a level. For a number of years, city and town government taxes have been held down to a low rate of increase, but this year they broke the bounds, with a 1 1/2 per cent increase, the highest for many years.

D'AUTREMONT
STILL WAITS
TRUMP CARD

ter me. I received a letter from the states six weeks before they got me in irons, but please remember, I was, and still am, a good poker player. When I heard that I had been located I walked up on a little hill overlooking Manila bay. Out in the bay there were some fishermen in small boats pulling in their nets. I gazed around and knew that it would be impossible to attempt an escape. Then I said to myself, "There's still a lucky card in that deck for me that hasn't been dealt yet." So I turned around and walked back to the barracks. Six weeks later I was arrested. Shortly before my arrest I was positive they had identified me as Hugh DeAutremont. They selected six fellows from my company to pose for some photographs alongside of some gals. They stood the other fellows at the guns and took one picture each. When they came to me, the officer said, "Let's take another one of Price." Then turning to me he said, "Turn sideways for a shot." Then I knew what they were after.

Hugh doesn't sit over in one corner of his cell with his head in his hands. He walks quite briskly. He is of the athletic type and it chafes him to be cooped up in a small cell when he would like to be out romping around in the sunshine. He is much thinner than usual as a result of his confinement but doesn't look sickly. He is receiving the best of treatment at the hands of the officers.

To attempt to question him concerning the actual crime brings no results. He closes like a clam when the murder is mentioned and the only answer to direct questions is a bland smile.
