FALLS CITY AND VALSETZ DISTRICT PLAN IS DEFEATED

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
SALEM, Ore., May 17.—On grounds that the proposed Falls City-Valsetz highway would not adequately serve the district involved the state highway commission has disapproved the boundary of the Falls City-Valsetz highway improvement district in Polk county.

The action of the commission is final and no election on the question of forming the district will be held.

"The proposed boundaries are such, because of the topography, as to include too great an area which cannot be served by this road or receive any benefits from it," says a statement by Mr. Klein, which summarizes the reasons given by Commissioners Doby and Gates. "If the boundaries were to be reduced to more nearly cover the section benefited, the valuation would not be sufficient to meet the cost of construction on the permissible tax basis. Further, the benefits to be derived from the building of the road do not appear to justify the expense of construction of a through road."

"The commission feels that the improvement of the Falls City-Valsetz road is a local matter which should be handled by Polk county and the road districts in the customary way that such local improvements are handled and financed either by district, county or market road funds."

The western terminus of the proposed road was Siletz, but ultimately it would have connected with the Roosevelt highway at Newport.

DELEGATES HOME FROM CONVENTION

Delegates to the state convention of the Business and Professional Women's club at Corvallis last weekend have returned to Roseburg and report a fine meeting. The Roseburg club had the distinction of being the only one represented in the state having all club officers present for the convention. Mrs. Edith Falbe, who with Dr. Lucetta Smith, president of the local club, is a member of the state executive committee, was re-elected a member of the state board. On June 23 she will go to Seattle where a meeting of the board will be held to determine the place of next year's convention. The Roseburg club has invited the other clubs to this city for next year. The delegates attending the convention were Vernita Kohlhaugen, Elvan Strader, Edith Gilmore and May V. Pyron and others attending were Dr. Lucetta Smith and Mrs. Edith Falbe. Miss May Baldwin and Miss Ethel Webb were present for the banquet Saturday night.

days, but realizing that all hope was gone, became reconciled to his fate and prepared to die.

Brownlee entered the death chamber at 5:28 o'clock and the trap was sprung a minute later. Sixteen minutes later he was pronounced dead by Dr. H. L. Edwards, prison physician, Dr. W. B. Mott, also of Salem and Dr. E. V. Morrow, of Portland. Besides the two Lane county officials and newspaper men, Sheriff Cookingham, of Pendleton and Sheriff Brownlee, of La Grande, witnessed the execution in addition to prison officials and a small group of invited witnesses.

Brownlee was not a stranger at the penitentiary, as he was first received April 28, 1923, from Deschutes county under an 8-year sentence for a statutory crime. He escaped May 1, 1923, and was returned to the prison on May 11, 1926, after serving three years of his term and was received for the last time April 4, 1927, under sentence of death.

CARDINALS CLIMB BACK TO SECOND PLACE IN RACE

(By The Associated Press.)

That duel of champions—between the winners of the world crown in 1925 and 1926—was on today in the National league with the St. Louis Cardinals again in second place and the Pirates back in third. The Giants still led the parade as New York retained its monopoly on the front rank of both leagues.

The Cardinals renewed their bid to repeat the title triumph of last year by knocking off the Phillies, 2 to 1, while the Pirates were losing to the Brooklyn Robins, 3 to 5.

As the time for the ending of the contest nears the contest is expected to become more spirited and all three contestants were out with their followers today in an effort to poll a larger vote.

"I'M A HERO, IT GIVES ME A PAIN"

So Says Diver Who Risked Life to Save New Orleans, in Own Story of Feat

EDITOR'S NOTE: One hero has remained unsung in the story of New Orleans' great fight against the Mississippi flood.

He is Ted Hebert, diver, who descended into the swirling, snarl-infested waters of the swollen river at Caernarvon crevasse, by the Poydras levee, to plant half a ton dynamite and give the flood an outlet.

Outside the levee, on the river side, stretched a "chatter"—a submerged ledge of clay, bound together by tangled roots of willows. This batter held back the water when the levee was broken. It had to be removed. Hebert volunteered for the job.

Hebert tells his own story below. He wrote it at the request of NEA Service, of which this paper is a member. It is a remarkable account of one of the high spots of the flood epic.

BY TED HEBERT

The Hero of Caernarvon Crevasse. They've been calling me "the hero" of the Caernarvon crevasse" around here. If they don't stop it before long I'm going to bust somebody in the jaw. This hero stuff is all the bunk.

It was a tough job, dynamiting the batter at the Caernarvon crevasse. But we divers get used to tough jobs. It's all in the day's work.

It was blind work. Most river diving is. You don't see anything. It's all feel work. The river is so muddy that all you see is a sick-looking sort of yellow light the minute you get a foot beneath the surface.

Worked By Touch. I used nothing but my sense of touch in planting all that dynamite. I planted a thousand pounds of it in 60-pound sacks, wiring the sacks by sense of touch to the willows under the water.

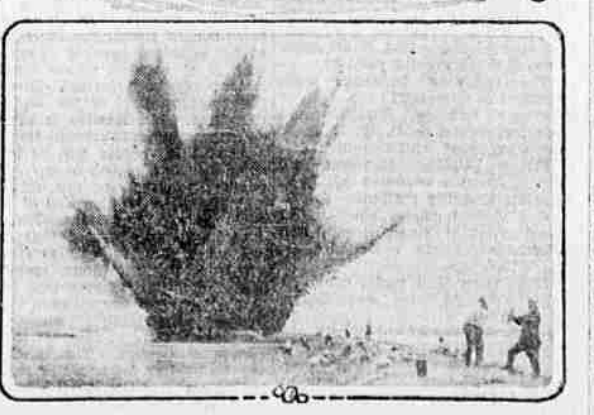

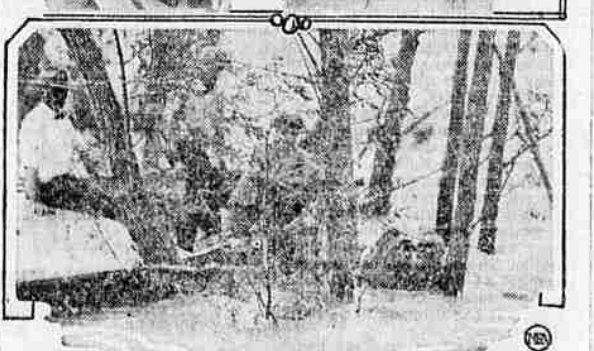

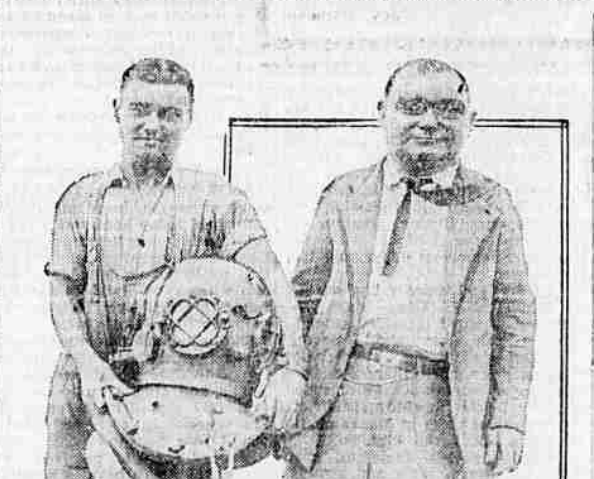

The dynamite was exploded by an electric wire running back to the levee.

I only used my diving helmet for this job. The only time you use the full diving suit is when you need it to keep out the cold. You don't fasten the helmet on anything when you use the helmet alone. You just slip it over your head and sort of hook your chin over the front part of the bottom rim. The air in the helmet keeps the water down just below your eyes. It acts like the air on a diving bell.

But the water does cover your chin. And my chin got all skinned up holding the helmet in place, the current twisting it so. But it didn't stop my chewing tobacco. I always chew when I go down.

The only real trouble I had was cutting through a lot of branches and roots and vines all tangled up down there under water.

Scared? Never! Of course every now and then a log or a snag came ripping through. But you learn how to handle them. Folks ask me if I got scared. Of course not. If you get scared you can't be a diver. I don't know that a diver ought to get any special credit for his heroism. He just naturally doesn't get scared. I've never been scared in my life. No man will go where I won't go.

These pictures show Ted Hebert's work at Caernarvon crevasse. Above are Hebert (right) and his son, who is holding the huge diving helmet that is Hebert's only protection under water.

The second picture shows Hebert ready to don his helmet and go under in a tangle of snags and roots to plant the dynamite at the foot of the batter.

At the bottom is a picture of the explosion of his submarine charge. It was this blast that destroyed the batter and let the flood have an adequate outlet.

But I like sea-diving better than river-diving. There is sunlight under the sea. A diver can see what he is doing. And there isn't all the tangled rubbish at the bottom of the sea that you find at the bottom of a river. In the sea, too, you don't have a lot of snags and logs ripping down at you in a fast current as you do in a river.

Folks have asked me a lot what was the most dangerous fix I ever found myself in. It was at the bottom of the Black river. That was some years ago. I don't remember just when. Sometimes I do five or six different diving jobs in a week, and when you keep that up for 20 years you begin to forget the dates. But this Black river job I went down to stop a woman and a little girl from crying.

A Bad Job. Heine Fink and I were sand-bagging on that job to lay the foundations of a railroad bridge. The Black river is nasty for divers. It was particularly nasty where we were working. There was a log-boom in the river and the bottom of the river, which was at high water, was covered with sunken logs, water-logged trees and vines.

Heine's life-line man said the line was tight. That meant Heine was in trouble down there at the bottom of the Black river. He wasn't able to see anything and the chances were he got afraid of the debris on the bottom. So I guessed it was up to me to get Heine.

I got him all right. I had to cut my way through vines with a knife. Swift current and blinding dark and all like that. But any other diver would have gone after Heine just like I did. I happened to be the only other diver there besides Heine.

Son Is Helper. The thing that gives you lots of confidence on a job like that is when you have a good life-line man. He allows your mind to center on your work. And I've got the best life-line man in the world. My son, Ted Hebert, Jr. He's never let his daddy in for any trouble yet.

I don't count this Caernarvon crevasse job by any means the worst I ever tackled, though it was a rough one.

We have pretty steady work, diving. But if jobs ever get scarce I have another string to my bow. I'm a structural iron worker, too. I like both kinds of work. It doesn't make any difference to me whether I am a hundred and thirty feet below the surface of the water or five hundred feet in air as long as I am earning money for my wife and boy.

But this hero stuff gives me a pain.
