Oldsmobile Ending Record Run

Stock Oldsmobile at conclusion of 6-day non-stop run of 4,026 miles which made two complete circuits of North Island, New Zealand.

With amateur drivers alternating at the wheel, a stock Oldsmobile Six recently proved to be capable of "the other side of the world" the wonderful stamina and craftsmanship that are built into the better American automobiles. For more than six days and nights without coming to a stop this Oldsmobile ran over a course comprised of all types roads and grades, piling up a mileage of 4,026.

The run was made on North Island, New Zealand, and consisted of two complete circuits of the island, starting and finishing at Auckland. Sixty per cent of the route was through hilly mountainous country with road surfaces consisting of an assortment of cement, bitumen, metal, dirt and, in many sections long stretches of deep, greasy mud. The roads varied from the sea level shore of Hawke's Bay to an elevation of 2,625 feet. The longest run on flat land was less than 30 miles.

To further acquaint the owner-driver conditions of the run, a relay of 15 drivers shared in taking the car over the course. According to those in charge of the run eleven of these men had never seen the car until they took their place behind the wheel. The change of drivers, taking on of fuel, food, etc., was accomplished without a stop by means of a second car that ran along side.
