THE WOMAN'S DAY

BY ALLENE SUMNER

Brides are hard-hearted and stingy. Old maids always want a little more heat in their apartments. Old people are the most generous with tips. These observations come from one Harry Miles, who, after years of experience as an apartment house janitor, has just written a novel about his tenants. The book is called, "Oh, Janitor." He explains the stinging on the grounds that brides, not being accustomed to apartment house living, do not know enough to tip. Old people, however, having "been around some," remember the janitor. And here's a poignant observation—

"Persons of small incomes live beyond their means. The less income one has, the more inclined he is to be a snob."

TWO WIVES

A passing strange wedding ceremony occurred in Chicago a few days ago when wife number one acted as bridesmaid for wife number two. Neither was there hair-pulling nor the "dirty looks." Stranger still, perhaps, is the attitude of wife number one who, though learning that her husband was a bigamist, forgave him, divorced him, and helped him straighten out his tangle of self-made woes by marrying the girl whom he had duped into believing he was a single man. Maybe this was nobility of character. Then again, maybe it was a desire to get rid of a noxious pest once and for all.

Speaking of weddings, here's a novel suit. Joseph Hassatt of Mount Vernon, N. Y., recently sued somebody or other for $50,000 who hit him with a car. Joe based his suit on the story that because of injuries sustained he lost his memory he forgot that he was to meet a certain girl at the church on a certain date and make her his blushing bride, and that because he did not do so, the humiliated girl now refuses to marry him at all. And who can blame him, even if all the wise-cracking husbands will chuckle something to the effect that he doesn't know what he was spared?

THE CLEAR TRACK

Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh, the mother of the New York Times flir, explains much of her son's attitude towards the perils of life. On the day that Charlie hopped off she went to her chemistry class room in the Detroit high school where she teaches, asking the principal to see that no reports of her son's progress were given her, as she wanted to be able to have her mind on her job. The ability both to desire a clear track for the job in hand and to be able to get it, is often hereditary and is perhaps the biggest trait a child can be given.

"COOK THIS!"

The latest! If you're dieting, you take your diet vials right along with you to your hostess's luncheon, tea or dinner party. Which means, I think, the death knell of entertaining, for what's the use? It has been bad enough for the last few years for a hostess to plan her luncheon for days, to sigh with relief and pleasure at her perfect luncheon menu of creamed mushroom soup, sweet-bread salad, hot buttered rolls, and a parfait with little cakes, only to have her guests sit down, look disgruntled, nibble the satines that go with the soup, and say as each vial is passed, "I'm sorry, but I'm dieting."

RUDE PIGS!

That, say I, is bad enough, but when they begin bringing their special concoctions and ordering the hostess to cook them, that, say I, is too rude to be overlooked. If you're dieting, live in private, and keep your troubles to yourself. You're no more interesting than a woman who tells all about her operations, as you try to regale the gathering with a detailed account of the demi-ouces you have lost. A nice little old lady whom I know gave a tea party the other day. It was a red letter day in her life. For a week she toiled in her hot kitchen, making little fruit and nut cakes that improve with age, little cookies, meringues and macaroons.

Came the day. One solid hour's conversation of nothing but, "My, who in the world could eat rich things like this? My, they look delicious, but I wouldn't dare! Can't I please have just a tiny unbuttered cracker?"

I tarried when the other guests had gone. The little old lady was in tears. She figured that just two of her hand-made delicacies had been eaten. "Rude pigs!" I said at their retreating forms. "Why don't they stay home if they feel that way?"

THE GOOD OLD DAYS—IN THE KITCHEN

By Olive Roberts Barton
In an old colonial mansion we were permitted to see the old kitchen. Never again will I talk of the good old days! Oh, yes, it looked lovely! Romance and sentiment hung from every spit and dresser hook, but any 1927 cook would go no farther than the second flagstone, if indeed she recognized even then the fact that she stood in the holy-of-holies that one of the F. P. V.'s called a kitchen. She would, in good high-school vernacular "beat it."

What kind of a stove did they have in the good old days of '76? None! Merely a great old-fashioned place hung with kettles and fortified with hooks on which to hang more kettles! At the sides were iron supports for spits. Spits of all sizes, kinds and conditions. Big enough to roast anything from a turkey to a cow. I guess they didn't have chops in those days—or sweetbreads or chicken à la king. I didn't see a frying pan around.

Well, to leave the spit-fire and approach one of the dressers! There were three of these. A dresser means a sort of shelf with cupboard above. Pewter and copper and copper and pewter and back again. "Shades of Mother Hubbard," said I. "All this to polish every day? Where is the tin and aluminum and enamel and oven-glass?" It looked beautiful (and so did the old Spode platters) but think of the work!

No water, of course! Out to the pump for that. Nothing to burn but wood. There was no coal or oil or gas—no railroads to get anything there anyway. And no electricity. Wood meant business, too. Hewing, sawing, chopping, drying—all sorts of things.

The whole magnificent place spelled work, but the kitchen most of all! And in that house had been entertained princes of Europe, presidents and diplomats. It was always full of company.

There were no grocery stores for miles. Everything was raised on the place except sugar, coffee, spices and tea—even their own meat.

But that kitchen! The Declaration of Independence should have had an amendment by the cooks of '76!

FARM NEWS

STATE MARKET AGENT'S LETTER

(By Seymour Jones)
Prof. F. L. Kent, statistician of O. A. C., sums up the Oregon fruit possibilities for 1927 as follows: Apples, 60 to 65 per cent of last year's crop. Pears, somewhat lighter than last year, large sizes being expected to develop. Prunes about 60 per cent of last year's production, but sizes promise to be larger. Cherries, a light crop is expected, hardly 25 per cent of last year. Strawberries, a heavy crop. Loganberries, after the heavy of last year and the winter injury in many fields, the crop this year may not reach 50 per cent of 1926. Raspberries promise a 70 to 75 per cent yield compared with last year.

Eastern Oregon Conditions
The Union Pacific System's weather report covering its eastern Oregon field at the close of June 19 is here summarized: Hood River, no damage to crops by recent storm; soil in good condition with plenty of water; fruit in good condition. The Dalles, sufficient moisture; pasture good; strawberries and vegetables all right. Madras, ample moisture; pasture fair; grain looking fine. Redmond, good grain crop; potatoes planted, with large acreage; sufficient water in prospect. Condon, soil and moisture satisfactory; dairy stock in good shape; the wheat fine. Lone Heppner, Pendleton, La Grande, Enterprise, all report similar encouraging conditions, with present promise of a prosperous agricultural year.

Kill the Codling Moth
Orchardists are advised by County Agent Inskeep of Clackamas, to apply the first codling moth cover spray as soon as possible now, as the adult moths have been flying about for several days. Powdered lead arsenate is the standard control material. The usual dilution is two pounds to 100 gallons of spray solution. In those regions where wormy apples are particularly difficult to prevent,

MENUS for the Family

By Sister Mary.
Breakfast—Stewed rhubarb, cereal, cream, French toast, syrup, milk, coffee.
Luncheon—Creamed sweetbreads in rice cups, steamed asparagus, cream cheese and orange marmalade sandwiches, lemonade.
Dinner—Broiled perch, cucumber sauce, potatoes au gratin, new beet and cabbage salad, strawberry frappe, crisp vanilla cookies, graham rolls, milk, coffee.
A rather dry cream cheese combines more satisfactorily with marmalade for a sandwich filling than a moist cheese. Preserved ginger is delicious with cream cheese for a filling, too. Whole wheat, nut bread or plain white bread may be chosen.

Strawberry Frappe.
One quart strawberries, 2 cups water, 11 cups sugar.
Combine sugar and water and boil five minutes, wash and hull berries. Press through a sieve and add to syrup. Cool. Pour into mold, pack in three parts ice to one part rock salt and let stand one hour. The mixture should be frozen to "mush." Serve with whipped cream sweetened with powdered sugar and lightly flavored with vanilla. Garnish with two or three fine strawberries.

the lead arsenate should be increased to three or four pounds to the 100 gallons.

Louis J. Taylor of Columbus, Ohio, master of the National Grange, has been in Oregon the past week, visiting several local Granges and attending the State Grange at Corvallis this week. In an address in Portland last Friday, Mr. Taylor made a plea that American-born farm products should be bought for food when substance contracts are signed by the U. S. government, instead of for-

Organization and Co-operation.
Speaking of organization and co-operation, the Weekly Market Bulletin, of Concord, N. H., wisely states: "Organization for marketing of products does not end with marketing alone. It has an effect on production, and a successful co-operative for marketing is sure to lift the level of efficiency in production among its members. Co-operative marketing promises to be the form of organization that will have the first and perhaps greatest influence in turning the American farmer away from individualism. Co-operation means a sinking of selfish, individual interest for the general welfare of the community, or for the association of individuals organized for some specific purpose. If the co-operative movement is to succeed, there must be a broad, generous interpretation of the term. Co-operators must be loyal to each other and to their organization."

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hiney, formerly of Roseburg but now of Portland land, spent the week-end in this city visiting with Mr. Hiney's brother, Charles Hiney, and family.
