

A REAL SHERLOCK HOLMES

California Chemist, With Four Slender Clews, Pulled Net Around D'Autremont Brothers

SLAYERS' NEMESIS

Edward Oscar Heinrich

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.—A quiet, studious instructor in chemistry at the University of California—the last person in the world one would have picked as a relentless man hunter—stands revealed today as the super-detective whose work brought about the arrest of the three De Autremont brothers, who bombed a mail train and killed four men in the Oregon mountains in the fall of 1923.

The man is Prof. Edward Oscar Heinrich. In real life he did work that rivals the famed exploits of Sherlock Holmes.

Hugh, Ray and Roy De Autremont fled into the Sierran mountains after blowing up a mail car and killing four men. No man had seen them. Behind them they left only four very slender clews—a revolver, a knapsack containing overalls, a pair of greasy overalls and a magneto which had set off the explosive that wrecked the mail car.

Told the Whole Story.

Inspectors of the postal service took these clews to Prof. Heinrich. He examined them minutely—and then, in true Sherlock Holmes fashion, announced:

"That one of the killers was brown haired, left handed, about 25 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, heavy set, neat in his personal habits, and a former worker in the lumber camps of Oregon and Washington."

The overalls, soaked in crocodile, had been worn to throw bloodhounds off the track. In the knapsack that contained them, were found several grains of rock salt. Prof. Heinrich pointed out that this indicated the bandits had used a cattleman's cabin as a rendezvous. The inspectors looked for such a building near the scene of the crime.

They found one, five miles away. In the cabin was a towel. Prof. Heinrich examined this under the microscope. He found short bits of hair clinging to it. The men had used it after shaving. Examination of the hair proved that the three men had taken part in the holdup.

What the Overalls Told.

He had gained his knowledge of the physical aspects of one of the robbers from the size and cut of the overalls; patch from pine trees had been sticking to part of this garment, and this had told him the man had been a lumberman. Other marks on the overalls had shown that the man stood habitually with his right side toward the trees, welding his axe in a left-handed manner. Microscopic examination of bits of hair clinging to the overalls, compared with a table of hair conditions at different ages, indicated his age.

Then, deep in an overall pocket, was found a crumpled, faded bit of paper. Prof. Heinrich put this under the microscope and found it was a postal money order receipt. He was able to make out its number, and postal inspectors, tracing it, found it had been issued to one of the De Autremonts.

With all these facts at their disposal, the postal inspectors had something to go on in their hunt. They promptly began to go through the north woods lumber camps, questioning foremen and gang bosses.

Presently their search was rewarded. Near Eugene, Ore., they found a camp from which three brothers, known as radicals, had disappeared shortly before the holdup. These three were the brothers De Autremont. The inspectors soon were in possession of photographs and complete descriptions of them. But still the hunt had only started. Although the inspectors were fairly sure of the identity of the slayers, they had not the faintest idea of where they were.

Now comes a revelation of the thoroughness with which postal inspectors run down a fugitive.

Two and a half million circulars containing photographs and complete descriptions of the fugitives were printed and mailed throughout the world. Every postoffice in the United States displayed these posters. Dentists were sent charts describing the fillings in the De Autremonts' teeth; optometrists were sent descriptions of their glasses; every public library in the country received a circular and a warning that the men often went to libraries to read radical literature.

Hugh D'Autremont was the first to fall into the net. He had enlisted in the army and was serving in the Philippines. A soldier in his company saw one of the posters and noticed the resemblance. When this soldier's enlistment expired shortly afterward he reported his suspicions to postal authorities. An inspector went to Manila and arrested Hugh.

Seized in Ohio City

Ray and Roy had located in Steubenville, O., where they were working in a steel mill. Someone there saw the posters, became suspicious and notified the postal men. The inspectors came and investigated quietly. For weeks they stayed in Steubenville, watching. At length they were convinced that the two men were the fugitives. Ray and Roy were arrested.

Hugh was on trial at the time. The jury found him guilty and he was sentenced to life imprisonment. Ray and Roy, who had been prepared to fight for acquittal, changed their minds, pleaded guilty and were sent to prison for life. The case that had look so forbidding four years ago was solved.

The postal inspectors, like the Northwest Mounted, always "get their man."

"Geography, defined as the study and interpretation of the relationship existing between environmental conditions and life, particularly man's life, touches nearly every phase of human progress."

"All questions which involve our relations to other powers that like ourselves have patriotic pride and a means to defend their honor have a geographical setting. It is the paramount duty of all citizens who wish to see our civilization preserved and advanced, to know the peoples about them, their problems, their resources, their possibilities and their spirit—in short, the political and geographical as well as the historic and economic bases of their life."

BODY OF E. P. BALLOU SHIPPED WASHINGTON AFTER SERVICE

The funeral of Edgerton Perrin Ballou was held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the chapel of the Douglas Funeral Home, H. C. Stearns, funeral director, in charge. Rev. E. P. Runnels officiated. Many beautiful floral offerings attested the esteem in which Mr. Ballou was held by his many friends. The body was forwarded on train No. 14 to Bellingham, Wash., where interment will take place. W. C. Ballou, a son, accompanied the remains. Mrs. Ballou and family are following by motor.

ROWING COACH CALLOW GOES TO PENNSYLVANIA

SEATTLE, Wash., July 6.—Russell S. Callow, head crew coach of the University of Washington, has ards will answer questions free of charge through this paper. All you have to do is write your questions briefly and clearly, sign your full name and address and mail it to Richards, in care of The News-Review, and then watch for your answer. Only your initials will appear in the published answer. The first installment of answers will appear Friday.

Richards does not claim to be a "mindreader," but a scientist and psychologist and says he derives all his answers through modern scientific methods, which he asserts is far more accurate than the old form of clairvoyance. Richards brings a very large show to the Antlers theatre, as he carries a big company of artists, two carloads of scenic effects and special orchestra, the entire three-hour production being in three parts and 12 scenes.

resigned to accept a similar position at the University of Pennsylvania. His resignation was received through the mail here this morning by Darwin Meisner, graduate manager at Washington.

It has been reported that Callow is to sign a 10-year contract at Pennsylvania for a figure variously placed at $12,000 and $15,000 a year. John Arthur Brown, chairman of the committee on rowing at Pennsylvania has been after him for three years.

CAT HELPS OUT

LYNN, Mass.—A campaign to rid the county of rats has found an ally in the person of a tiger cat that daily captures at least two large rodents from a dump between the tracks of the Narrow Gauge railroad and the Lynn Way boulevard. Railroad workers about the Commercial street crossing have watched the cat daily as it returned with two rats between its teeth, one on either side of its chops.

FAME FINDS HIM IN THE BLACK HILLS

Rolf Lium had no thought of fame when he accepted a $50-a-month summer pastorate at Hermosa, S. D. But the first sermon the 20-year-old theological student preached in his new charge was heard by none other than President and Mrs. Coolidge. He is pictured here in his local pulpit.

PAYS FOR HAIRCUT AFTER 25 YEARS

DES MOINES, Ia.—Twenty-five years ago a man named Brown entered the barber shop of Philip Wenger, got a haircut, asked the barber for credit since it was his wedding day, and departed. The other day the same Brown, now superintendent of mails, got another haircut in Wenger's barber shop and paid the bill. Brown said he would pay on his silver wedding anniversary and he did.
