marines at Ocotal, requesting a sixty minute truce. Major Hatfield replied that the truce would last only as long as the better of the white flag was in sight.

According to a government report, a conservative senator living in Ocotal, Jose Maria Pazanga, was murdered by the rebels when he entered the town.

General Sandino was not in the thickest part of the fighting, but directed his forces from a distance.

Salt Lake City then decided to return to Los Angeles by way of Portland. Both were unfamiliar with Portland and were unable to give definite information as to the location of the store which they burglarized and the garage where they stole the car that they wrecked.

From the store they took nearly $29 in money from a till and a slot machine, and a quantity of candy and cigarettes. These were found on them by the officers.

The boys claim they had had no sleep for three nights. The result was that as they drove south, Baker, who was driving, went to sleep and ran the car into the ditch near Gervald.

Other claims to have been an inmate of a boys' reformatory in California.

their companions in front and rear. Clarence Outbank was the tenth in line, but was tied, and finding himself unable to hold the line, let go in time to save himself.

Aid Quickly Secured. Others in line held their places while their leaders untied and hurried down the slope to peer over the edge of what seemed a crevasse hundreds of feet deep.

Perley Payton, well known mountain climber and Mazama, arrived first and was able to see that the party had fallen only about 20 feet after the slide, landing with tons of loose snow. He saw a confused mass of arms and legs, broken alpenstocks and blood.

General Feland commended Major Hatfield and Major Rowell for their bravery. The scouting planes also proved their worth. The flight of the bombing planes to Ocotal thru a terrific storm was a brilliant feat.

General Feland has given orders for this bombing squadron to destroy any concentration of Sandino forces.

Laborite Visions War. WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Pan-American Federation of Labor conference was thrown out of its peaceful routine today when Salomon de la Silva, a Nicaraguan delegate, commenting on the engagement between American marines and Nicaraguans, declared that "the war is on," and if the marines "do not leave the country they will have to destroy the entire population of Nicaragua."

PARIS, July 14.—A simple, lonely grave overlooking a wheat field at the little village of Chamery, northeast of Chateau Thierry, was blanketed with fresh flowers today in memory of Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt.

It was nine years ago today that young Roosevelt, American World War flyer, was shot down and killed. His body still rests where German airmen buried it.

At the Methodist Memorial in Chateau Thierry, not far away, may be seen today parts of the plane in which Roosevelt fell. In the village of Chamery is a memorial fountain carrying the youth's name and a quotation from his father: "Only those are fit to live who are not afraid to die."

Eighty Per Cent Girls Knock-Kneed Says Flo Ziegfeld

Beautiful Blondes Plentiful but Brunettes Are Rare Says roadway Revue Producer.

NEW YORK, July 18.—"Eighty per cent of all American girls have knock-knees." And if you don't agree with that, go and argue it out with Florenz Ziegfeld. He says so.

Mr. Ziegfeld, champion non-stop stroller, who began strutting knock-kneed 23 years ago when only chorus girls had them, declares that "to get a chorus of 24 dancers whom I can line up straight across the stage and not have a pair of knock-knees among them is a nearly impossible task."

Broadway's leading revue producer casts a few other pearls of criticism and advice to adolescent beauties with stage ambitions in an article he has written for the August issue of Smart Set magazine.

Legs, while they must be good, are not so all-fired important as modern style dictators seem to think, he reveals. "I study unknown girls first for personality, second for beauty of face, third for beauty of form and fourth for good carriage," he says.

If a girl has these essential assets and is 16, no older, she has a chance. If she is a brunette rather than a red-head or blonde, and is less than five feet, four inches tall, she has a better chance to join the Folies chorus, according to his rules of selection.

He Sees Them All. "Despite all the hocus-pocus circulated about the inaccessibility of managers, I see literally every girl who calls at my office and asks to see me," he declares. "As some 10,000 girls a year from every part of the globe feel an urge to make me their Mecca, this is somewhat exhausting."

"Personality is by far the rarest and most important asset. I seek beauty is something at which an audience looks. Personality is something they watch. If a girl has sufficient personality it doesn't matter if she has a figure like a cactus. Nobody will ever notice. On the other hand, a girl's face may be like a casket of jewels. But lacking personality, few ever observe her beauty."
