ROSEBURG, OREGON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 1927.

A SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE

Welcome to Joe Welch, nationally known manufacturer of fishing tackle, and his party of friends who have come from California this month to try their skill as fly casters on the North Umpqua. We hope the trout are not in a contrary mood and will "rise to the occasion." Mr. Welch is an authority on American fishing waters and his literary contributions on the subject are widely read. It is not doubted that his coming experience on the North Umpqua will verify the flattering advance information given to him, nor that his verdict will be of inestimable value to this community in the way of stimulating the influx of vacationists. An intimate friend of Zane Grey, noted fiction writer, who has given the Rogue river many columns of fine publicity, recently tried his luck on the North Umpqua, with the result, we are informed, that he became very enthusiastic over the region and promptly wrote of its unexcelled outing advantages to Mr. Grey, then in New Zealand. We need not be surprised, therefore, if the novelist, upon his return to America, appears in our city with an equipment of fishing tackle. And we will certainly be glad if his expectations are fully realized. Endorsements from such prominent anglers as Joe Welch and Zane Grey, together with the eventual completion of the Roseburg-Diamond lake road and the abolishment of commercial fishing, will bring thousands of dollars annually in tourist trade to this city. The North Umpqua region has always been one of Roseburg's greatest assets. If we cannot hope to glean financial profits from its vast timber wealth within the period of the present generation, we can at least look forward to material benefit from its outing advantages at a no distant date.

THE PRESIDENT BECOMES A SPORT.

Regardless of the political significance or insignificance which Calvin Coolidge has made of the presidency, there can be no question as to what the presidency has made of Calvin Coolidge. He is far different from the man he was when he emerged from Massachusetts.

That earlier Coolidge was a man who had an eye for nothing but business. He had no hobbys, indulged in no recreations. "I like the theatre," he once remarked dryly to an interviewer, "but I never have time to go to any shows." He never danced. In society he was a fifth wheel. He didn't even fish. The sporting instinct which is supposed to be in every man was in Mr. Coolidge an undeveloped ductless gland.

His years in Washington have slowly changed Mr. Coolidge and he is emerging today a better sport. That it is all political persiflage and publicity, as his bitterest enemies charge, is open to doubt. Mrs. Coolidge probably had a hand in the emergence of the cocoon. That Mr. Coolidge will ever be a butterfly is doubtful. As an intermediate chrysalis, he is doing well.

BRASS TACKS IN 2227.

It is to be hoped sincerely that the World Population Conference which meets in Geneva late in August can come to some satisfactory solution as to what is to be done 300 years hence when the people on this sphere will number, according to latest estimates, nearly 8,000,000,000 souls. It is high time that the world begins to worry about awful impending overcrowding. Think of it, the danger is only three centuries away! It will have to be faced squarely by your great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great grand children, who must find space for these eight billions of people or be shoved off into space.

True, Marshal Foch says that there will be the worst world war in history inside of twenty or thirty years, but why should such trifling things as that worry the high minds at Geneva?

TAX MONEY IS DISTRIBUTED TO ALL DISTRICTS

At the monthly session of the county court apportionment of tax money received to date was ordered by the court. The apportionment was based on a one-half mill ratio, each district receiving an amount equivalent to a one-half mill levy on the valuation. The warrants for the various municipalities were written today on the same ratio, the amounts received being, Roseburg $2,237.98; Myrtle Creek $168.09; Riddle $63.59; Drain $115.60; Oakland $163.68; Sutherlin $230.18; Canyonville $21.46; Glendale $141.41; Reedsport $365.22.

PHOTOGRAPHERS LAUNCH ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

The $2,000,000, four-year national advertising campaign of the photographers of the United States and Canada, largest association advertising campaign being carried on in America, makes its opening smash this week, according to information just received from national campaign headquarters at Indianapolis, Indiana, by Jim Clark, of the Roseburg Studio. Mr. Clark is a contributor to the fund and is taking an important part in the movement.

Various media are being used for the campaign, Mr. Clark stated. The national advertising committee urges photographers to use local newspaper space generously. In the national field, nine general magazines and seven publications for business men, having a total circulation close to 20,000,000, are being employed with a total of more than 100 advertisements between now and May, 1928, as the first phase of the four-year drive.

7-YEAR FIGHT FOR CONDEMNED MEN NEARS END

Sacco and Vanzetti Soon to Know if Electric Chair Will Claim Them.

AFFAIR STIRS WORLD

Indiscreet Talk of Judge and Third Prisoner's Story May Bring Clemency.

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

BOSTON, July 20.—As Nicola Sacco and Bartholomeo Vanzetti entered the fourth day of their hunger strike at Charlestown state prison, where both are awaiting execution next month, indications were seen that Governor Alva T. Fuller's special advisory committee, which has been reviewing the seven-year fight of the men to escape electrocution for a double murder in South Braintree, had nearly completed its labors. Only a few more witnesses would be heard, it was reported, then the committee would listen to summations by counsel for state and the condemned men.

In the meantime both prisoners continued to decline all food while Vanzetti took an occasional sip of coffee.

BOSTON, July 20.—The end of seven years of waiting in the shadow of the electric chair is in sight for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

The result of the latest, and possibly the last fight to save the lives of the internationally known pair, who claim they were convicted of murder because they were radicals, is expected soon.

The long struggle in the Massachusetts courts ended last April when Judge Webster Thayer sentenced the men to die during the week of July 10. They had been convicted of murdering a paymaster and his guard during a robbery in 1920.

Then the eyes of the world turned to Governor Alvan T. Fuller of Massachusetts when Vanzetti, in a long written plea, asked him, not for a "pardon," but for "justice." Accompanying the plea were five affidavits by persons who affirmed that Judge Thayer, during the trial, had spoken outside the court room in language that showed he was prejudiced against the defendants.

Governor Starts Probe.

The governor assumed the task of reviewing the evidence, and also questioned the jurors who brought in the verdict of guilty. He worked with an advisory board consisting of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University, President Samuel W. Stratton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Judge Robert Grant.

When it became evident that the work of reviewing the evidence would not be accomplished before the week in which Sacco and Vanzetti were sentenced to die, Governor Fuller granted a respite until the week of August 10. In the meantime, the committee visited and made measurements at the scene where Frederick A. Parmenter, the paymaster, and his guard, Allesandro Bernardelli, were shot to death. They also examined witnesses who testified at the trial and questioned members of the jury, 11 of whom are still alive.

William G. Thompson, defense counsel, was invited to present any new witnesses and any new evidence he had. This move was interpreted in some quarters as indicating a desire on the part of the committee to investigate a line of defense that was excluded by the various courts under rules of evidence binding them.

Case Stirs Whole World.

No other criminal case in the history of Massachusetts ever attracted such world-wide attention as that of Sacco and Vanzetti. For seven years the men, themselves, steadfastly protested their innocence, basing their battle for liberty on the contention that they did not have a fair trial. The declared that they were tried while "Red" hysteria was at its height, and were condemned because of their admitted radicalism, and because they had been draft evaders during the war.

In dramatic court room statements, just before Judge Thayer sentenced them, Sacco and Vanzetti accused him of prejudice and of influencing the jury against them. The judge had thrice denied motions for a new trial, and the Massachusetts supreme court had overruled exceptions.

Sympathizers Use Bombs.

During the trial, sympathizers throughout the world raised more than $250,000 for the defense. Frequently, when decisions were returned against the defendants, demonstrations occurred in foreign countries. United States embassies in Europe and South America were bombed and strikes were called. The vacant home of one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution was wrecked by a bomb. Judge Thayer and other judges of the Massachusetts superior and supreme courts were placed under guard.

Thousands of communications from all over the world reached the governor, some asking intervention and some opposing it. Cablegrams from officials of foreign governments urged him to exercise executive clemency. Among the communications were several letters threatening the governor with death if Sacco and Vanzetti were executed.

Third Man Figures.

The life of a third man, doomed to death, has been prolonged by the lengthy court proceedings and the appeal to the governor during the past 18 months. He is Celestino Madeiros, convicted of murdering a bank cashier at Wrentham, Mass., during an attempted holdup.

Madeiros, while in jail, made a statement tending to exonerate Sacco and Vanzetti of the crime, and accusing the "Morelli gang of Providence, R. I., of the murders. Madeiros asserted that he was associated with the gang.

His statement made one of the grounds of the defense in its appeal for a new trial. The possibility that he might act as a witness resulted in several respites being granted him. He is now under sentence to die during the same week as Sacco and Vanzetti.

LANDING DEVICE AID TO AVIATION

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

WASHINGTON, July 20—A device by which it is claimed an airplan can be launched in one second with 100 feet of runway is announced by C. Francis Jenkins, Washington inventor, who recently evolved a reversible propellor attachment to permit a plane to land on roofs and other restricted areas.

Explaining his more recent invention, Mr. Jenkins said that the plane is hauled by a motor to the top of a runway 32 feet from the ground and then released, its wheels and tail skid being set in channels of such an angle that the plane is thrown at once into a natural nose dive.

EXCURSION TRIP FROM ROSEBURG TO ODELL LAKE JULY 31

The Southern Pacific company will run an excursion train from Roseburg to the Odell Lake survey on Sunday, July 31, the train leaving this city at approximately 7 a. m. and returning on the same day at about 11:30 p. m., according to an announcement made today by J. E. Clark, local agent. A round-trip fare of $5.00 will be the charge made for the excursion. This short trip will afford Roseburg folk a fine opportunity to see this wonderful new country, as about four or five hours are allowed for the time spent at the lake. As the date of the excursion falls on a Sunday, many more people will be able to take advantage of the opportunity to visit the place, and from present indications a large number of local folk will make up the party leaving from here.

AVIATOR COURTNEY POSTPONES FLIGHT UNTIL TOMORROW

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

SOUTHAMPTON, England, July 20—Captain F. T. Courtney, who was to start a flight to New York this morning, postponed the trip for the day when a trial flight proved the wireless apparatus was working unsatisfactorily.

In addition to the wireless, Captain Courtney decided that several other minor adjustments would have to be made.

It was the intention to fly to Valentia, Ireland, this morning, a distance of about 400 miles. The plane was to be refueled there, and again take the air this afternoon for the westward journey across the ocean to New Foundland.

Courtney announced he would take off at seven o'clock tomorrow morning.

OBERLIN COLLEGE CLAIMS CREDIT FOR "SKEDADDLE"

OBERLIN, Ohio, July 20—"Skedaddle!"

The warning cry employed in the Civil War by Union forces which found themselves tightly pressed by Dixie troops was the invention of Oberlin College men, alumni assert.

It was originally a corruption, they say, of "skedannumi," a Greek word meaning "to scatter."

Gen. Giles W. Shurtleff, professor at Oberlin, commanded a regiment of negroes, and many of his subordinates were from Oberlin, where students knew their Greek. Corrupting the Greek word, officers and negroes alike evolved "skedaddle," which found its way into the dictionary as a colloquialism and spread throughout the country, even across the Mason-Dixon line.

THE TINYMITES

STORY by HAL COCHRAN — PICTURES by KNICK

READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE

'Twas queer to see the Tinies stare and watch marshmallows blown in air. The husky man was very kind and did a lot of tricks. He'd blow them big, and blow them small, and very quickly showed them all the way to make the candy land on funny little sticks.

"Oh, my," said Clowny, "that looks sweet. I'd sure like one of those to eat." The old Marshmallow Man replied, "Just help yourself, my son. Don't eat them, though while they are hot. You'd burn yourself, as like as not. It doesn't take them very long to cool when they are done."

The Tinies then each took their turn, first making sure they didn't burn. The fluffy candy tasted great. Of course 'twas cooked just right. Wee Clowny shortly got his fill, and then gave all the rest a thrill because he'd messed the candy and it made his face all white.

And then the big Marshmallow Man announced a very thoughtful plan. Said he, "Why don't you run along and find the Chocolate lake? It isn't very far from here. There's nothing there that you need fear," And Scouty said, "I guess we will. I have a tummy ache."

And so they bid the man goodbye and started off with merry cry. Said Carpy, "this is going to be like queer things in our dreams." And sure enough, he seemed just right, for soon they saw a funny sight; a very funny little group of pure white candy creams.

They watched the creams run 'round about, and then with quite a happy shout, they saw them jump upon a board until they thought 'twould break. "Why, that's a springing board," said one. "No wonder they have heaps of fun. That's how they get their chocolate coats—by jumping in the lake."

LADYBUG FARMS VALUABLE PROJECT IN COLORADO

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., July 20—Farmers of the future may receive market quotations reading, "Hippodamia convergens, $5 a quart," if plans for the starting of a lady bug farm near here are carried out.

Since the near plague of ladybugs in July, 1922, when bushel after bushel of the harmless insects were taken off trees in the Pike national forest, the research department of the service has found this region suited to the raising of the insects. To orchardists, melon and onion growers the bugs are of great worth, as they eat the larvae and worms that destroy these crops.

The market price of the bugs is set at from $3.50 to $5 per quart, and already there is a demand from the canteloupe and melon growers of the Rocky Ford and Arkansas valley growers.
