MYSTERY METAL IS DEFENDED BY W. S. BOYER

going on. If Mr. Merrin produces such a furnace and shows the metal dripping from the rock as he hopes to do there will be no doubt of the facts in the case. However, Mr. Boyer declares that he has a report from a reliable man who made another test by sprinkling crushed ore upon a fire of blacksmith's coal until a total of six pounds mixed with a small quantity of coal to keep the heat up, and actually saw the drops of metal drip from the grate under the fire.

There is no secret about the furnace or rock ore flux used by Mr. Boyer. He is using the system and formula of the Grants Pass investigators. His furnace is made of brick, about 30 inches square and lined with fire brick and asbestos. A hole is left in the bottom of the front, opposite to the blower pipe at the rear. There is a baffle wall of fire brick, a half partition raised from the bottom and lowered from the top, which separates the chamber holding the charge of ore and common rock salt under which the fire is started from the front chamber, which at the bottom is filled with wet charcoal. This charcoal is kept wet by water poured through a small crock-pipe running from the side of the furnace.

As soon as the fire, started with pitch and coal, is going good the charge is put in and the top of the furnace is sealed with clay and marked so that any tampering with it would be easily discovered and the charge is allowed to "sweat" for several hours. When opened the metal, according to Mr. Boyer is usually found upon the charcoal as if it had dripped down the baffle wall.

Mr. Boyer is going back to Grants Pass next week and with a representative from the bureau of mines make further tests using as many types of ore as are available, and any variations that may be suggested for further proof of the results already obtained. Regulation of the temperature of the furnace is suggested as a precaution against failure, it being suggested that either too high or too low a temperature may account for either a failure of the metal to run or for its passage off in the form of a gas.

No explanation as to why reputable and recognized assays have failed to get at least a trace of metal from the ore submitted, have been advanced, but the fact that many men with reputations for veracity have asserted that they have seen the metal taken from the furnace into which the rock had been put makes a question that Mr. Boyer insists shall be answered.

Willing "Go To Mat"—PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—W. S. Boyer, district inspector for the United States Interior Department, is not satisfied with declaration of Dean Newton of the Oregon Agricultural college school of mines concerning the mystery white metal of Josephine county.

"There is metal in the rocks of Josephine and Douglas counties, or I am the worst-duped man in Oregon," said Boyer. "I am ready and willing to go to the mat with Dean Newton and the Bureau of Mines. I want to make those mining engineers 'take water' or admit that I have been badly fooled."

Boyer, who is interested in the questions of minerals in southern Oregon, so that his department may, if necessary, reclassify Oregon and California grant lands, has just returned from Grants Pass, where he made 19 tests. In nine of the tests he got from one half ounce to 15 ounces of white metal using about eight pounds of rock to a test. He said the test showed percentages of lead and antimony and some metal not accounted for.

BOLIVIA INDIANS IN REBELLION TO GAIN SUPREMACY

bandful of intrepid followers, imprisoned and later slew the great Inca chief, Atahualpa and brought the Inca empire under subjection. Due to the oppression after the Spanish invasion, the Inca tribes were reduced to the status of porting the heaviest people on earth and today their descendants live in a wretched state.

The sudden return of the fighting spirit of the Indians is believed to be due to dissatisfaction over the division of land, coupled with indignation by agitators. The Indians have taken to the war path in quiet red blankets, peculiar cloth coverings and funny little hats cocked over the fore part of their heads. The women, with babies carried on their backs by means of blankets slung around their necks, follow the warriors on their rampage.
