FINE PROGRAM BEING ARRANGED FOR ROUND-UP

PENDLETON, Ore., Aug. 13.—The finest array of talent ever assembled for the Pendleton Round-Up will be here for events of track and arena at the coming show, September 14, 15, 16 and 17.

There will be the famed Drumheller outfit, George Drumheller bringing his speedy racers and skilled riders from Walla Walla; the Irwin and McCarty aggregations and many other performers who have won honors at shows all over the United States.

With McCarty will come Chester Byers, trick rider; Carl Arnold, Phil Yoder, Ben Johnson, Billie Wilkinson, Dick Shelton, Bob Crosby, Norman Cowan, Paddy Ryan, Bob Aekins, George Weir and Fred Lowry; a man's relay string, two women's relay strings; a pony express string; a Roman race entry; entries for all the flat races; and one or more entries for the derby. Irwin will have similar entries, as well as Sam Garrett, trick rider; three trick riders, five or more steer ropers, three bulldozer and three bronc riders.

Pendleton has this year chosen a real cowgirl for queen of the Western Fair. She is pretty, Mabel Strickland, popular with Round-Up crowds not only for her unquestioned skill as a rider and steer roper (she is the only woman steer roper in the world), but for her beauty and charm. She is a dainty bit of femininity and her slender figure belies the strength she shows in her handling of steers and horses.

Livestock which has already arrived for the Round-Up includes two big carloads of the wildest of Mexican steers. The buckers will be here by August 15.

Cottage cheese, Roseburg Dairy, Phone 186.

NEIGHBORS OF WOODCRAFT ATTENTION

A picnic will be held Monday evening, 6:30 o'clock, Aug. 15 at Umpqua Park grove. Ladies please bring cakes. Invite your friends.

Jungle Breath

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Attempts have been made on the life of Elise Marberry, an American girl owning considerable property near the little town of Porto Verde, in west central Brazil. She has escaped harm due to the shrewdness of her cousin and protector, Vilak, who with his friend, Nunnally, an elderly American chemist, is trying to learn the reason for the strange enmity for Elise.

Living near Porto Verde is one Gayford Prentiss, a strange and forbidding character, who has evinced a hatred for Elise.

Tinky, Elise's two-year-old orphaned nephew, is kidnapped. A native reports Prentiss has been seen with the baby. The trail leads into the jungle.

Calamity overtakes the expedition Vilak organizes in pursuit. Native trackers are injured or desert. Treachery breaks out. Their white friends are fever victims and are left with a friendly tribe. Elise, Vilak and Nunnally finally emerge from the jungle. Presently they come to the outskirts of a strange city, resembling old Inca civilization. Here they are made prisoners. They discover they are in the power of Carlos D'Albentara, whom they had known as an engineer back in Porto Verde.

The black ruler of the city decides to marry Elise and to pit Vilak and Nunnally to death. They are to be tortured at the feast of Rayml, as are Elise's nephew and Prentiss. The feast day arrives and a friendly Indian slips a dagger to Vilak, who cuts his bonds, then proceeds to awe the natives by walking through fire. D'Albentara is killed. Vilak starts to relate the strange story of Prentiss.

NOW BEGIN THE STORY
CHAPTER XLVIII
"Merely this," Vilak answered, "The first quest for gold, and to my mind the much less important, was the attempt of Limy, Potts, Pasquale Hyana, and Detto Cleoroni. Three rogues working together, they believed—with reason—that they could easily get many thousands of dollars from you by kidnaping Tinky. That was why Limy was in the tree waiting for you to drive by the day Tony Barbeta was killed. He was going to cause you to have an accident or something of the sort and try to kidnap Tinky then. His arrest somewhat dumfounded the trio's plans, but didn't block them.

"When Tinky disappeared the first time, it was the Italians who had taken him, one of them riding the horse with the injured foot which had belonged to Prentiss. I was silent for a moment, but when they had stolen Tinky they were on the road to Furnace Caves when they were unfortunate enough to meet four mounted gendarmes who watch that place pretty closely just because it is such a haven for crooks and smugglers, and they had to run for it, being compelled at last to get rid of the child, which was crying in terror and otherwise embarrassing their flight.

"Falling in this scheme, Limy, after the others had aided him to escape from jail, decided on a much bolder experiment, which, if successful, he believed would be far more lucrative; that was to kidnap you yourself and threaten you until you gave them any amount of money they chose to ask for."

"Was that the occasion," the old man murmured, "the soldiers—yes—soldiers—captured us on the way to Villava?"

"Exactly. Of course, that experiment was a failure, to mention the two Italians, who, never do wells themselves, were naturally on good terms with the negro-dwellers of the native population, had heard vague rumors about some of the Indians in D'Albentara's camp, and catching the poor drunken fellow we saved that night—you don't know about that incident, Elise—tortured him to see what he knew, and found his information highly interesting.

"Then, discouraged by the lack of success in their schemes to get money from Elise, they decided to abandon her in their plans, and follow up the information they had gained. Which brings us to the second and more important quest, the one which concerns Prentiss and D'Albentara."

The tom-toms began to sound monotonously. He listened keenly a moment, then continued, "I've told Nancy many times before that these people aren't Inca. Far from it. But they have been living in these Inca ruins for many generations and naturally have taken over any of the Inca possessions which remained.

"If you remember your histories, you'll recall that the thing they had most of was gold. Gold in such enormous quantities that the Spaniards who first saw their cities wouldn't credit their eyes. Walls of the nobles' houses literally covered with it, great vases and even furniture made of it. Called it 'the tears of the sun.'"

He gazed off toward the chief's palace silhouetted against the starlit sky. "It was in that building with Batalago's this afternoon, in a great stone basement of it, a gold. A tremendous amount of gold. Ornamental armor, carvyl flowers, all that sort of thing. How much it's worth, I couldn't estimate. Besides this there are rich gold mines a few miles away where it originally came from. I'm half inclined not to take you to see either. It's done too much harm. This gold. Killed too many people."

The hideous painted priests began a droning chant. "You know Prentiss is an archeologist. He's always specialized in Inca archeology. Some years ago he got into that trouble with the museum, you remember, and resigned under a cloud of scandal. He told me about it today. Got foolish over some woman, and sold a lot of the museum property which he had discovered to gratify her taste for money. No need going into details.

"But the effect of it was that he was pretty swiftly dropped by most of his friends and acquaintances, and, embittered, went on to South America again, intending never to return to the States. He soon resumed his explorations and researches and was working in the eastern parts of Peru when he heard vague reports that there were interesting old Inca ruins off in this direction. So after considerable wandering over the mountains and desert here in search of it, he finally arrived and found D'Albentara here.

"D'Albentara was one of those unusual persons who occasionally encounter," he went on, "a highly intelligent cultured man who has gone completely wrong. He was quite suspicious of Prentiss at first, but when he learned that the other's mission was purely an archeological one, treated him very cordially, and they became good friends. Seems he was the negro-dwellers' son of an excellent Portuguese family, and having gone to Brazil to escape arrest after committing a murder, had been a civil engineer and numerous other things until he got into trouble again and had to leave once more.

"In this manner, drifting from wider spot to wider spot, he came by accident upon this place which belongs to Batalago. He was a clever fellow, was D'Albentara, very clever. And it didn't take him long to find out about all the gold Batalago had here or to make himself the half-breed's chief adviser so that he could set about getting it. To do this, he began playing politics.

"As I've often said, a king or chief is nothing but a different variety of ward politician. Batalago especially deserved that designation because he wasn't too sure on his throne. He had plenty of enemies, particularly among those natives here who probably had considerable Inca blood in them and certainly some of good stock. Naturally, they began to resent having a mongrel like Batalago systematically wiping them out. And D'Albentara carried his favor by helping him.

"Well, I remarked before that D'Albentara, after he found that Prentiss wasn't gold hungry, became friendly. Probably quite glad to see another white man, particularly an intelligent one. He invited Prentiss to see one of his excavations, which was a perversion of the old Inca practice of human sacrifice.

"Prentiss went. The victim whom the gods had supposedly selected for the occasion was a baby, the son of one of the best of the Indian families who had been the chief's worst enemies. A child just about as old as Tinky was at the time.

"Prentiss was a scientist, who had steadfastly maintained that it was a bad plan for an archeologist to interfere in local politics. But despite his bitterness, he was at heart a very decent fellow in many ways, and when the excavation was about to take place it was a little more, than he could stomach. He darted forward, picked one of the priests down—he was quite husky then—and heeled the baby in his arms.

"Of course, they caught him immediately; he was condemned to be sacrificed at once, for his violent act had outraged every god they possessed. He was already on the sacrificial stone and the tappers had just left him to begin work on the child, when fortunately for him Batalago and some of his priests decided that the sacrifice had badly jolted the omens so that the time was no longer favorable. Consequently he and the child were thrown into prison to await a more favorable moment.

"I won't bother you with the details of how he escaped through the aid of friends of the child and, taking the baby with him, after incredible hardships, finally got to Diamantino in western Brazil.

"Back in semi-civilization, he naturally thought he was safe, but he had been there two weeks, trying to recuperate from a wretched fever he had contracted coming through the jungle, when he found that D'Albentara and his men were following him. Not that D'Albentara bore him any personal animosity. He didn't. But the child had become a symbol. If he didn't bring it back, and if Prentiss's act went unpunished, Batalago's prestige would be enormously diminished, and likewise that of his chief adviser. While if D'Albentara did succeed in returning Prentiss and the child, the grateful chief would refuse him nothing. A fact which

MRS. BASSETT ALWAYS TIRED

Now in Good Health by Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lansing, Mich.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I needed it. When I first used it I was so bad I could hardly walk across the room without crying. I was tired all the time. I think my trouble was coming on me for six months before I realized it. I read of your wonderful medicine in the paper, and my husband bought me a bottle, and after the first few doses I felt better, so kept on taking it until I was well and strong. I take it at times when I feel tired and it helps me. I will always have a good word for your medicine and tell anyone what good it has done me. I recommended it to my neighbor for her girl, who is sixteen years old, and it was just what she needed. She is feeling fine now, and goes to school every day."

Mrs. E. F. Bassett, 216 South Hayford Avenue, Lansing, Michigan.

Do not continue to feel all run-down and half sick when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is sold by druggists everywhere.

Some more loose ends are to be picked up, after which Vilak comes to an understanding.

DELEGATES LOAN ASSOCIATIONS TO VISIT PORTLAND

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 12.—Elaborate preparations are being made by the Portland city league of savings and building and loan associations for the entertainment of about a thousand delegates from the building and loan associations of California, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico who are expected to attend the sixth annual meeting of the Pacific States Savings and Loan Conference which will assemble here on August 29, 30 and 31.

Speakers of national prominence, beside building and loan leaders from the states mentioned, will address the convention. Entertainment will include, among other things, an automobile drive of 173 miles up the Columbia-Columbia river highway to and around Mount Hood. Otto T. Salick, president of the U. S. League of building and loan associations, which held its annual convention in Asheville, North Carolina, last month is coming from the east to attend this conference, as is Dr. Horace F. Clark, director of the American Savings, Building and Loan Institute.

Stanley D. Decker, of Salt Lake City, is president of the Pacific States Conference. Lee C. Stiff, of Portland, is vice-president and James V. Whipp, also of Portland, is secretary.

The last annual gathering of the conference was in Salt Lake City last September.
