Gene Tunney, Humorist! It Sounds Queer, But His Social Secretary Found Him That

By NEA Service

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—This is the story of the joys and sorrows of being "social secretary" to James Joseph Tunney, sometimes called Gene, heavyweight boxing champion.

It's told by Thomas M. McHale, who gained his information by a year or thereabout of experience.

McHale, alleging his recent separation from the social secretary ship constituted a breach of contract, has filed suit against Tunney for $15,000.

* * *

McHale, who formerly was a stenographer on de luxe Pullman trains, met Tunney when the champion was returning from the Philadelphia fight. The discovery that McHale's and Tunney's parents alike were born in County Mayo, Ireland, created a bond between the two.

Home from his acquisition of the championship, Gene soon found he no longer could attend personally to all the little affairs of everyday life such as answering the telephone, rejecting dinner invitations, and writing a note of thanks to the young couple in Nacogdoches, Texas, who had named their first-born after him. So he hired McHale as his social secretary.

Why did McHale get the gate after several months of secretaryship? "I don't know," said McHale, "unless it was because of my mannerisms. Mine and Tunney's weren't exactly the same."

Certainly he worked indefatigably at looking after a great mass of correspondence—letters, telegrams, invitations; served as a buffer between Gene and multitudes of hero worshippers; kept everyone at a distance when Gene was in a mood of heavy reading or deep thought. Certainly that is, according to McHale.

"And I was responsible," McHale added, "for Gene's presence as the honor guest of the governor of Washington at a dinner given in Olympia while the champion was on a vaudeville tour. Through me, he met a lot of other personages of note."

* * *

"Yes reiterated the ex-social secretary, it must have been my mannerisms. Gene and his trainer, Louie Fink, always were poking fun at me. Despite this, I remained quiet and reserved.

"One morning, while I was under the showers, Gene pranced up and gave me a light punch in the stomach. 'Gee, you are in better shape than I am,' he grinned. 'We'll use you in one of the preliminaries.'

"I didn't receive that suggestion with any degree of enthusiasm. Before I replied to Gene, Louie Fink strolled up and remarked, 'Don't do it, Gene. You couldn't miss dat guy's long chin from a mile away.'

"I accepted the witticism good naturedly, even though it was at my expense.

"Other members of the camp sharpened their wits on my hide, but none of their sallies ever caused me to lower the dignity of my position by an indulgence in anger."

* * *

McHale harbors no personal animosity toward Gene, he avers. It's a fact according to McHale, that Tunney is a bona fide book lover.

"I simply felt," he said, "that I was dismissed from his service without adequate cause. As a social secretary, I feel that I was a success. It was my understanding that I was to remain in Tunney's employ until the end of his fight career.

"I am willing to leave it to the courts whether my suit is a just one."

"Members of the camp sharpened their wits on my hide"

Discharged his duties faithfully

Isolation

ROBINSON CRUSOE had no telephone. There was no one on his island to talk to but Friday who was never beyond the reach of Crusoe's voice.

But there is no reason for any one in the United States to live like Robinson Crusoe. Anyone's telephone reaches anywhere and everywhere in the land. It will put people in touch with the nearest village or most distant city. It will run errands through rain and snow just as cheerfully as on sunshiny days. It helps people keep in touch with their neighborhoods and it makes one neighborhood of the whole country.

Moreover, it is the constant aim of the Bell System which serves the country to make its service better and to fit it more closely to the particular needs and desires of its telephone users.

JAPANESE ADMIRAL PLEADS FOR U. S. FRIENDSHIP; SCOUTS WAR TALK

(By NEA Service)

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 26.—Japan likes Americans and wants to be friends; and if this nation will meet Japan half way, no one ever need worry about that "war in the Pacific" that agitates so many statesmen and generals.

This is on the word of Rear Admiral Osami Nagano of the imperial Japanese navy, who is in New Orleans in command of the Japanese training cruisers Asama and Iwate, which are touring the world with a party of naval cadets.

First—The Toasts.

Stocky, wiry and capable, the admiral, in his quarters on the Asama, gave an interview setting forth Japan's position. He was cordiality itself; the reporter had hardly been seated before a mess attendant appeared with two brimming goblets of golden sake, Japan's national drink. Before the interview could begin there must be toasts to President Coolidge and to his imperial majesty, the Mikado.

The admiral speaks excellent English, he spent five years in America, as student at Harvard and naval attache to the Japanese embassy in Washington.

"Japan's problems?" he repeated in answer to a question. "Japan has them. We are a nation of more than 70,000,000 souls on an island which in size may be compared to your state of California. And our population is increasing rapidly. Japan must expand. The same urge and necessity that drove the British out from their small islands across the world are impelling Japan today.

"We are trying to meet this in many ways. Thousands of Japanese are in Korea. Thousands more have gone to Brazil; more thousands have gone to Mexico and Central America. But that does not solve our problem.

ADMIRAL NAGANO

Developing Industries.

"So we are developing industrial life in Japan. We are building industrial centers to provide work for thousands of men making all sorts of things. Under industrial conditions a population can live in far less space than when it is spread out on farms. We want to make Japan a great importer of raw materials that Japanese workers can make into finished products. Already we are doing that—from New Orleans alone Japan imports some $80,000,000 worth of cotton every year.

"We are doing everything we can to keep the increasing number of Japanese hands busy. It is a real problem—a problem to which Japan is giving its best thought. It is a problem about which America, too, has reason to think."

"You mean the immigration laws?" asked the reporter.

"Exactly," said the admiral. "I say it in all friendship. But that is a sore spot. Thinking Japanese cannot help feeling that America's immigration laws discriminate against the Japanese as against no other nation on earth. And that hurts our national pride.

Don't Want Trouble.

"No intelligent Japanese wants trouble with America, just as no intelligent American wants trouble with Japan. But in America you have what you call your 'jingoes'—and in Japan we have our 'jingoes' too.

"It is a problem for the cool heads and intelligent brains of both nations to settle. Our two nations should be friends, both by ancient tradition and by modern relations. And when you want to do business with a man you don't wave weapons and make war talk; you make friends with him, and when differences raise you try to settle them amicably.

"Why, the difference in Japanese immigration to America between the old 'gentlemen's agreement' and your new immigration law would be less, I understand, than 1000 Japanese a year. Yet I understand, too, some of the American feelings that were behind the drawing of your immigration law.

"Is the heart of Japan changing? On the surface, yes, to a small degree. But on the whole many of the old customs cling to us. I, for instance, recently built myself a home in the American style, with American plumbing. I wear a uniform that, except for the difference in insignia, might be an American naval uniform. Yet when I am at home with my family I remove my American clothes and wear the traditional kimono.

"And up in the interior they are still building houses in the old Japanese way, with bamboo and oiled paper. To be sure, Japan is not what it was when your Commodore Perry first visited it; we have, for instance, our suffragettes, and our little group of—flappers, you call them?—who bob their hair and wear short dresses and try to be like the girls of Paris and New York. But there are not enough of them to form a real problem. The men still rule in Japan."

Not the Married Men.

"The married men, too?" asked the reporter.

Admiral Nagano rang for another tray of sake to close the interview. As the mess attendant filled the glasses with the golden liquor, which can give an army three kicks and still be 'way ahead, the admiral smiled.

"Maybe you are married yourself," he chuckled.
