ELECTRIC MAN IMITATES THE HUMAN WORKER

Automaton Responds to Voice of Master and Works Fine.

CALLED A TELEVOX

Device Has Extremely Sensitive Ear, Attuned to Sound of Human Voice.

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—A "mechanical man" whose faculties are at both ends of a telephone connection and whose functions imitate those of human workers today held the center of the stage of scientific achievement.

This modified automaton responds to the voice of a master as effectively as a servant to the housewife, a clerk to a broker and as mechanic to the garage man.

The machine, an electrical contrivance known as the "televox," was demonstrated here by H. J. Wensley, engineer for the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company.

The device has an extremely sensitive ear, attuned to voice sound waves that must be delicately carried to a mechanistic "brain." Orders are issued through a tuning fork into the telephone to which is attached a small loud speaker. The telephone connection is made in the usual way. When the bell rings at the post of the automaton a ringing relay calls into action the equipment, which lifts the receiver. Amplifiers then take up the sounds that come over the wire, the different sounds thus magnified controlling different wires, and the current thus transmitted throwing on or off a switch, as desired.

The televox is contained in a box three feet high and two feet wide and consists of a series of sound filters, amplifiers and magnetic levers. It responds only to sound transmitted by telephone and only to sounds pitched in certain keys.

In the demonstration, at the first sound over the televox the automatic slave lit a series of lights; at the second it turned on an electric fan; at the third it switched on a searchlight.

Three of the machines are in active use by the war department, stationed at the three reservoirs that supply water to Washington, D. C. There they watch over levers, performing perfectly on a 24 hour a day basis the duties the same number of human workmen would be called upon to do in eight hours.

MARKET RATINGS

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—The COMMERCIAL BULLETIN will say tomorrow:
"A fair demand for wool has permeated in spite of the holiday and prices are firmly maintained on all descriptions; in fact, values have been consolidated on the basis of the recent advance. The manufacturing situation is healthy and the outlook for dress goods evidently the best it has been for some time."
Foreign markets keep very strong in spite of the desire of many buyers to see some recession in prices at this time for the sake of buying the new clip of the primary markets at a reasonable level which would assure some profit. Nothing has yet been done in the new fall Texas clip.
Mohair is rather quiet and unchanged in price. All bids have

Business in the local wholesale been rejected at the sales of fall Texas hair thus far."
