SMALL TOWN IS LOSER IN SUIT

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., Oct. 18.—The determined little farm community of Bonanza, 26 miles east of Klamath Falls, lost its fight against the state highway commission in circuit court yesterday when Judge J. L. Campbell, Oregon City, summarily dismissed the suit against the commission.

The community which had enjoined the commission from relocating the Klamath Falls Lakeview highway, was told by Judge Campbell from the bench that the commission had the right to locate or relocate highways where it wished, that the judiciary could not—except in case of fraud—interfere with the executive branch, and that the commission was answerable to the legislature, not the courts.

The location of the highway would leave Bonanza off the state highway system. Originally it had been intended to route the thoroughfare thru the little town.

Undismayed, the community, thru its attorneys, announced it would appeal to the state supreme court.

STEAL JEWELRY OF MUCH VALUE FROM SALESMAN

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 15.—Six bandits today held up C. H. Brown, 38, a traveling jewelry salesman and robbed him of $45,000 worth of jewelry. He told two men who this afternoon released him from a post north of Fort Douglas to which he was found handcuffed.

Brown's story told to Dr. A. N. Leonard and H. P. Thomas, an attorney, who found him near the Fort Douglas golf course, was that he was accosted on Main street about 10 o'clock. Guns were placed at his back and he was forced to climb into an automobile standing in the street. He was then strapped blindfolded and taken for a ride.

The salesman said the two men were apparently familiar with his movements since he left Los Angeles. "I was preparing to leave the city, he said, "and had dispatched a large part of my stock to the depot. The rest I was carrying in two small bags. It consisted largely of rings and other valuable jewelry."

As he stopped at a water fountain he was halted with "hello, Brownie," and as he looked up the men directed him into the car. Four others were in the machine. The police were given only meagre descriptions of the men. Brown said he is employed by a New York jewelry importing firm.

FALL SINCLAIR JURY COMPLETE; TRIAL STARTED

as tentative jurors. Her successor in the box, Jesse H. Foster, a negro war veteran, remained there only a short time, however, being thrown off by a challenge.

Neither side exhausted all of its preemptory challenges before announcing satisfaction with the jury. The government used up eight of its 11 and defense six of its allotment of 10.

With the swearing of the jury, Owen J. Roberts, special prosecutor, made the opening statement for the prosecution, saying the government would prove a conspiracy between Fall and Sinclair for the leasing of the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve in Wyoming.

The government lawyer emphasized the secrecy attending the negotiations which the former interior secretary and the wealthy oil man. He said the lease was drafted in the office of Sinclair's lawyer and not in the interior department and that Fall signed it on the ground that a lease was necessary to protect the reserve from drainage which experts of the department had told him there was no danger of drainage.

Speaking in a conversational tone as he faced the jury with folded arms Roberts also recalled that Fall had announced to friends with some satisfaction that he had obtained control of the oil reserves from the navy department and also that he had refused to deal with any applicants for leases on the Teapot Dome save Sinclair.

Coming to the crux of the government case, Roberts said the prosecution would show that $230,000 in Liberty bonds obtained as dividends from the profits of the Continental Trading Company, Ltd., of Canada, reached M. T. Crowley, son-in-law of Fall at Pueblo, Colo.

Declaring that only James E. O'Neil, Robert Stewart, H. M. Blackmer and Harry F. Sinclair had dealings in the Continental company, Roberts said the government would show that of these Sinclair alone had dealings with Fall at the time the profits were made.

Taking up a $25,000 transfer of Liberty bonds made by Sinclair to Fall after the latter's retirement from the cabinet in 1923, Roberts said those bonds were the same kind as those that went to Everhart.

Concluding his twenty-minute statement to the jury, Roberts declared that the government would show that the "secrecy, private dealing and favoritism" in the lease of Teapot Dome, "spells a conspiracy to defraud the government."

All of this, he said, was intended as a corrupt and improper overruling of what was right for the government "by a secret agreement between a private citizen and a public official."

District Attorney Gordon said privately today that the jury would not be locked up as was the case during the trial of Fall and Edward L. Doheny in the Elk Hills lease case.

Justice Siddons, trial judge, solemnly warned the jury not to discuss the case with any outsiders; not to read anything about it as published in the newspapers and not to undertake to formulate any opinions as to guilt or innocence in their own minds until evidence and instructions were in and they had retired to their room for final deliberations and a verdict.
