The PENNY PRINCESS

BEGIN HERE TODAY Jerry Macklyn, advertising manager of the Peach Bloom Cosmetics Co., transforms his plain secretary, Vera Victoria Cameron, into a beauty through use of the company cosmetics. The beauty specialist relations Vera after a picture Jerry finds in his desk. Jerry falls in love with Vera, also known as Vee-Vee, and his love persists even after he learns Vera consented to the transformation only because she was in love with a man who ignores her. Vera goes to Lake Minnetonka for her vacation because she knows this man, Schuyler Smythe, will be there. Smythe and other guests mistake her for the ex-princess, Vivian Crandall, who, after a Paris divorce, is hiding from her parents and ex-husband.

Vera tries to convince people of her true identity but is not believed. Because she realizes Schuyler is in love with the girl he thinks she is, Vee-Vee puts forth her confession from her. She learns Jerry unknowingly used the Crandall heiress's picture in refashioning her and he begs her in a letter not to pose as the heiress should she be mistaken for her. Nan Fosdick, whom it is rumored Schuyler is engaged to for her money, begs Vera to leave the hotel, saying Schuyler loved her until Vera came. Nan's mother warns Vera that Schuyler is only a secretary, a four-flusher and fortune-hunter. Vera determines to tell Schuyler the truth but puts off confession when he tells her of his love. A bell-boy appears and summons Vera to meet two men who await her at the hotel. Schuyler says he will not let them take her away. He steals a car, and they leave. Vera tells him she is not Vivian Crandall. He angrily asks her if she is crazy and betrays himself by his emotion. Then he recovers and tells her it is just a scheme to ditch him, that he will keep her until she'll be glad to marry him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVIII Vee-Vee's heart leaped in her breast, but it was with fear and not with joy. Then nausea rose in her throat, so that she had to lay her fingers against it. This couldn't be Schuyler shouting at her, snarling at her, the music gone from his voice, his eyes darting gleams of hatred at her. "Read this letter, Schuyler," she said. She wanted to call him "Mr. Smith," to hurt him with scorn, but again her pride forbade. "It will explain everything and I hope it will convince you." He stared at her, his mouth, beneath the little silky black mustache, twisted into an ugly line; then he snatched the stiff sheets of Jerry's letter from her hand and held them under the dashboard light, bending over to read. His knee brushed hers, and she shrank farther away from him, but she could not tear her eyes away from his face. An hour ago those lips had pressed down upon hers and she had almost swooned with delight. Now the very thought of his mouth upon hers brought disgust. Why hadn't she seen before that it was a cruel, selfish mouth? She studied his face as if she had never seen it before. It was terrible to feel the scales falling from her eyes, to feel love and passion draining out of her heart and body, like blood spurting out of an opened vein. "Why," she marveled to herself, "he is not fit to touch the paper that Jerry's letter is written on." She wanted to snatch the letter from his hands. He was making low, animal sounds of bewilderment and fury as he read, but she did not listen. Nothing he could say now seemed important to her, just as he would let her go when she had convinced him that she was not the prize he had been so sure of bagging. "So you're just a cheap little crook!" He raised his eyes from the letter and looked her up and down with searing contempt. "Thought you'd rope in a rich husband."

"You aren't so cheap!" he amended bitterly, banging his clenched fist against the wheel of the car. "That would have been a rich joke on you, wouldn't it? Vee-Vee asked, with stinging sarcasm. "Well, Mr. Smith—you see, I know your real name; have known it from the first day; have known also that you were only a secretary—like myself—that you saved money all year for this pitiful party. And yet, her voice, changed in spite of herself. "I loved you anyway, thought you might be glad that I was poor, like yourself. Why, I wouldn't believe it when Nan and Mrs. Fosdick told me you were a society hanger-on, a fortune-hunter, a fortune-hunter. I had fallen in love with you at sight, came here because you were here."

"Yes, after you'd had your accomplices to remodel you into an exact copy of Vivian Crandall, the man cut in violently. "By heaven, you're both guilty of a crime, and I'm going to see that you are punished, you and this Jerry What-his-name-of-yours. He lunged forward to hold the letter under the light again, to find the name that had hardly registered in his quick reading. "Give me that letter!" Vee-Vee commanded him harshly. "You're not fit to touch it or to say his name. Give it to me, I say!" She struggled with him for the crackling sheets, succeeded in tearing them from his hands. When she had them at last, she leaned far over the side of the car, tearing them into tiny bits, flinging them away on the brisk night breeze.

"Now," she panted, facing him defiantly, her green eyes blazing in the dark like an angry cat. "What are you going to do, Mr. Smith?" "I'm going to take you back to the Minnetonka and turn you over to the detectives who are waiting for you," he told her roughly. "Fine!" she applauded sarcastically. "And won't your friends enjoy the story? The elegant Mr. Schuyler Smythe, who ditched a devoted millionaire for a penny princess—Oh, you'll be popular at the Minnetonka for the rest of your two weeks' vacation, Mr. Smith! Of course," she pretended to consider thoughtfully, "they might chuckle and say that Vivian Crandall had simply outsmarted another fortune-hunter." She left the sentence in the air, a smile tugging at the dimple in the left corner of her mouth. The man jerked up his head and stared at her, at first incredulously, then with horror—horror of himself, of his own stupidity. He gulped, clawed at his collar with trembling fingers, closed his eyes and shook his head as if to dispel some frightful vision. Vee-Vee watched him with malicious amusement, behind which lay pain and shame for her own shattered pride. "Vivian!" Schuyler Smythe began brokenly, reaching out a shaking hand to her, "you're cruel, but God, you're clever! And I fell into the trap. Poor fool that I am! You said—just now—that you had fallen in love with me, at sight, that you had been glad that I was poor. Can you ever forgive me?"

LEGION AUXILIARY TO ASSIST IN PLANS FOR ARMISTICE DAY

One of the most enthusiastic and interesting meetings of the fall for the American Legion Auxiliary took place last evening at the armory, where the members met for the regular monthly session, followed by a social. The main item of business taken up was discussion of plans for the Armistice day celebration. The auxiliary will assist the local post in putting on a mammoth Americano parade, which will consist of all comic entries. A committee was appointed by the president to take care of preparations for the event. The auxiliary this fall has sent in one complete baby layette to the welfare chairman in Portland and a box of clothing to the hospital chairman. At the close of the business meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was enjoyed.
