CONDITIONS IN MID-OCTOBER

Autumn expansion to mid-October has been less than was expected and less than normal, if comparison be made with the corresponding seasons of the last three years.

Although the unusually warm, open autumn has tended to hold back demand for goods for cold weather needs, retail trade as a whole is good. Employment is less full than at mid-October, 1926, and payrolls somewhat lower, but conditions in this regard can not be regarded as seasonally unsatisfactory.

The impression that business is not so good as it ought to be, or at least as it was hoped it would be, seems to originate from two sets of circumstances. First of these is the fact that two major industries, namely, iron and steel and the automobile manufacture, are in a definitely less satisfactory condition than they have been for a good while.

What is going on now is merely a phase of the adjustments always being made somewhere. Those who see the dullness in steel and automobiles are inclined to overlook the fact that the tire industry, cotton textiles and leather manufactures are enjoying better business than they have for a long time, while rayon and many of the chemical industries continue to be highly prosperous.

Borrowings for crop-moving and for industrial and commercial purposes definitely seasonal in character have expanded in accordance with their usual course. There are some indications that autumn demand may not be far below its peak, but in any case it is plain that any seasonal firming up of rates which may occur as a result of it will be moderated and temporary.

Occasionally we hear of a college president who knows just what a college should be. Ernest Hatch Wilkins, new president of Oberlin, seems to be fitted to carry the work from where Henry Churchill King left it after 25 years of splendid teaching.

Winter is knocking at the door. It is bringing with it the threat of colds, a nuisance which is too common and which is all the worse because it can largely be avoided. The Cleanliness Institute of New York, founded recently by The Association of American Soap and Glycerine Producers, is spending a half million dollars during the coming year to educate the public to the advantages of keeping clean.

In London, 104 years ago, the opera, "The Maid of Milan," was sung and a classic given to the world. That was "Home, Sweet Home" and it never will perish. Now we hear that the home of John Howard Payne, its author, in Easthampton, L. I., is to be preserved.

New York's mayor has ordered the law enforced closing cabarets at 3 a. m. If a patron isn't robbed by that time he doesn't deserve to be.
