The Blazing Horizon

THE STORY THUS FAR

When Jeff Harrison, gambler, is killed in a poker game in Caldwell, Kan., his 17-year-old son, Tony, is taken to the Bar K ranch in the Indian territory by Joe Craig, who appoints himself the boy's guardian.

There Tony is welcomed by Titus Moore, owner of the Bar K brand, and his little daughter, Rita. Another who has befriended Tony is Gordon W. Little, who later becomes known as Pawnee Bill when he teaches school at the Indian reservation in Pawnee.

In the months that follow, reports come to the Bar K of the activities of the now notorious Benton gang, Tom Benton being the murderer of Jeff Harrison. Craig and Tony depart for Pawnee to visit Pawnee Bill. There they learn that he is going to take a bunch of Indians with him and join Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show.

CHAPTER XX

It was rather lonely at the ranch. Titus Moore and his wife and daughter had gone to Virginia for a visit, with the likelihood that Rita and her mother would remain and the girl be placed in a finishing school in Richmond.

Mrs. Moore had decided that Rita had had enough of the school in Kansas City, and the colonel did not stand in her way. He had resigned himself to seeing less of his wife and daughter until things had shaped themselves more definitely in the Indian territory.

He explained the situation to Tony Harrison when he returned. "Rita's mother never did like it out here anyway, and now that Rita's growing up she figures it's no place to rear her as a young lady—as she puts it—and give her some of the educational advantages that young girls ought to have."

"I reckon I can see her way of reasoning all right." He looked over toward the rude structure, half shack and half dugout, that he had dignified with the name of ranch house. "I guess it is sort of uncomfortable here for a woman who's been accustomed to luxuries most of her life. In Kansas it wasn't so bad; I had a decent house to live in and a barn that wasn't an eyesore. Here, half of the thing that I call a ranch house is dug in the side of a hill, and a few rough timbers thrown together for the express purpose of keeping the winter winds and snows off that Kentucky thoroughbred of mine."

But, he added, "I couldn't be helped. There certainly was little wisdom in erecting expensive buildings on a ranch that was his only by sufferance of the Cherokee Indians. The rude buildings were a constant reminder of the uncertainty of his status; there was no telling when the government might decide to run him, and others like him, out of the territory."

"If only I had title to it, Tony, it would be different. But I came down here because I was selfish enough to grab at a chance to run a ranch with no overhead to it. Being unable to lay any plans looking ahead to a permanent stay, is the price I pay for it."

He cast a speculative eye toward Craig and his men, a few rods distant. The spring roundup was on, and Craig was busy supervising the branding of new calves. "I guess," Titus Moore continued with a smile, "Rita's mother was pretty good to stick it out down here as long as she did. She's forgotten what a neighbor looks like."

Tony agreed with him. "I think it was mighty fine of her, considering. And it will be nice for Rita to go to school in the east."

The colonel darted a quizzical look at the boy. "I'll sure miss her, though. Won't you?"

Tony Harrison reddened and shifted uncomfortably. "Why, yes—sure," he answered hesitantly. "It won't seem natural around here without her. She—she's all the time into everything, kind of."

"She insisted that she'd be out here late in the summer," the colonel supplemented. "Before she starts to school."

"Will her mother let her?" Moore laughed. "When Rita insists, you've just got to let her have her way. I guess you know that."

Tony grinned. "That's right. . . I guess I'll be giving Joe Craig and the boys a hand."

"Wait a minute," the colonel detained him. "How would you like to go to school, Tony?"

"Who—me?" The boy stared uncomprehendingly, then shook his head. "I've got a living to make, Colonel."

"There's plenty of time to think about that later. I thought maybe if you'd like to go away to school some place it might be arranged. I'd be glad to pay all the bills." He spoke awkwardly, realizing he was making a bad job of putting his thoughts into words.

"The boy looked away before answering. 'I'm real obliged to you for the offer, but right now I can't see that way. I've got some money myself, as far as that's concerned; and I wouldn't have had that if it hadn't been for you.'"

He pressed Titus Moore's hand earnestly. "I just want to stay on the Bar K for a while, Colonel." He swung around abruptly and left, and whistled the air of a cowboy song he had learned from Craig.

He was not anxious for the colonel to know the true state of his feelings. "I'll sure hate to leave him," he soliloquized, and turned a moment later to look back.

Titus Moore appeared to be engaged in earnest conversation with his beloved Fancy. He was shaking his head, a gesture that Tony interpreted as an expression of his disappointment that his offer had gone some unaccepted. With another, Titus Moore might have argued the matter to the point of insistence, but he understood, better than any, the sensitiveness of the boy's nature and his own delicacy prevented him from pursuing further what Tony, in his independent way, might have construed as an offer too charitable to permit of acceptance.

"I guess I was a fool, Fancy," he said to the mare. "The boy's got more education right now than most high school graduates, and more downright sense than most people twice his age. He had the advantage of an intelligent father—which is what you have, Fancy. I guess human beings and horses are pretty much alike, after all."

Tony Harrison was thinking, as he fell to work that the summer ahead of him would be something to be endured rather than enjoyed. Therefore summer had always meant the presence of Rita Moore, who, if she was provoking and imperious, was more to him than he had begun to realize until a few short weeks before. He closed his eyes, and Rita stood before him as he had last seen her, the day she left for Virginia. Her hair an auburn, curly mass; her eyes, gray and demure, behind lashes of startling length and blackness; her face with its square little chin and its impudent little nose, across the whiteness of which there trailed a handful of tiny freckles, wreathed in a shy smile.

That smile, he reflected, had been the revelation of a new Rita, to be endured rather than enjoyed, during the daylight hours and set him to thinking for into the night. He had never seen her smile like les? Or had the colonel had something else in mind? He could find no satisfactory explanation.

Of one thing he was certain: he would not remain at the Bar K very much longer. During idle intervals he took to reviewing the events of the three years that had elapsed since his father's death, and at times he regretted bitterly that Joe Craig had brought him to the ranch and took to speculating on what might have happened if he had been left to shift for himself.

He worked like a Trojan and sought Craig's companionship that he might not be left alone with his thoughts. He dared not admit to himself the truth; he was too ashamed; people, if they knew, would laugh at him.

Those golden evening hours

— give them the brightness they deserve

Why have you waited? Is it because you are afraid a light plant will be just one more thing to attend to in an already crowded life? Then you have much to learn about this protected plant with its one-knob control that a boy or girl can operate safely.

Have you waited because you thought light plants were not all that they should be? Then remember that the present Fairbanks-Morse plant is the finished result of twenty years of experience. Yes, Fairbanks-Morse built the first of all Home Light Plants and has been constantly improving it ever since!

You have only to inspect the new Home Light Plant to know that the ultimate in farm lighting has now been realized. See it in action. Listen to the smooth purr of its balanced engine. See the flood of un-flickering light it gives. Inspect the advanced features that are possessed by it alone.

Come in today and watch a demonstration. Let us tell you all about this plant and the finance plan that makes home comfort easy.

SHERIFF CRITICIZED

(Associated Press Leased Wire)
PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 12.—Methods of the sheriff's office in handling delinquent property deeds were criticized at a meeting of the county commissioners today by H. N. Scott, real estate dealer. Some certificates of delinquency had been predated, he said, and the sheriff had cancelled certain deeds after they had been made out by subordinates. Scott declared the sheriff's purpose was to curry favor with tax delinquents.
