THE SANITARY PATH OF PROGRESS

We have gone far in methods of sanitation since the day when the dog used to sleep in the washpan or the back porch. Now it seems the very apex of cleanliness is about to be reached. Somewhere in New York a barber shop porter made a tremendous mistake. Carrying out his office of brushing the coat of a customer, this overzealous fellow actually raised a few specs of dust. The New York heath commissioner heard about it, and of course something drastic had to be done. Looking the matter up, the commissioner discovered that the porter's whisk broom is contrary to every known dictum of sanitation. A foul thing, in fact. The health commissioner called in the barbers and ordered when Paw buys little Wille som that the whisk brooms be whisked about no more in their shops. It shall be even as he has spoken; the whisk broom must let the customers alone. Now a man can leave a barber shop in New York with a coat full of hair and be sure that he hasn't picked up a single bug. It's a great age. But that isn't all. Some attention caller in the same large village calls attention to the fact that dogs and horses are prone to carry various bacilli about with them. Immediately there is a rush to arms to follow this horseless Paul Revere into the battle of cleanliness. And the Society to Prohibit Dogs and Horses Within the City Limits is organized! Legislation to keep the horses and dogs outside the city is being framed. Sweetness and light and sanitation! Horseradish and applesauce and plum pudding and prune juice and bologna! Onward, cleanliness, onward!

Alsace is like some wives. It is never satisfied, no matter what is done for it. A strange borderland, neither entirely French nor entirely German, it has been fought over as is a juicy bone by two big and angry dogs. When it has as is a juicy bone by two big and angry dogs. When it has been in German hands, it has longed for France. Now that it is in French hands, the Germans cease to be the villains of the piece. You get as a couple of the piece. of the piece. You get an angle on this problem when you remember what a canny Alsatian said not long ago. He summed up in a nutshell the situation with which the French government has to cope: "We love France, but we hate Frenchmen."

Criticism is all very good, but sometimes criticism degenerates into empty, though sonorous, phrases. University men should use judgment. Fine and sportsmanlike friendship has been killed by the fuss stirred up through just such articles as this.

No real good would be accomplished by the publication of any of them, the matter practically being a closed issue. We are all too happy contemplating a joyous Christmas and a prosperous New Year to throw a monkey wrench into the wheels of progress of this old town.

The kidnapping case in Los Angeles was about the most atrocious murder that we have had called to our attention. That such brutes are allowed to live in a zivilized community-and get away with heinous crimes of this kind-is most horrible to contemplate. If caught, this degenerate should LAFE PERKINS SEZ be put to death by some other means than hanging. Most any kind of punishment would be too good for taking the life of an innocent child in the manner accomplished.

The old town is coming back into her own. Business is good in all lines and there's a lot of the yellow metal floating around. When we get the bridge across Deer creek com-plete so that the traveling public can "shoet" up the main VALUED AT HUGE SUM drag we'll be carrying a broad smile.
