The Blazing Horizon

THE STORY THUS FAR
The story is laid in the Indian territory and along the Kansas border in the '30's when a fight was being waged by the "Bombers" for the opening of the territory to settlement.
Chief characters are:
Tony Harrison, orphaned at 13 when his father was murdered in a poker game;
Pawnee Bill, adventurer, Indian interpreter and showman;
Joe Craig, who takes Tony to the Bar K ranch to live;
Titus Moore, owner of the Bar K;
Rita Moore, his little tomboy daughter.
When Tony is 15, Rita and her mother depart for Virginia and the boy learns for the first time how much he cares for the little red-haired, arrogant miss.
Word is received that David Payne, leader of the "Bombers" and chief agitator for the opening of Oklahoma is dead. Pawnee Bill is one of Payne's sympathizers, and so is Tony, although his benefactor, Titus Moore, opposes the opening with all his might. When Pawnee Bill goes out the following year with a wild west show he takes Tony along.
CHAPTER XXVII
Enterprising showmen of the day were awakening to the possibilities of the American Indian as a drawing card; especially in the east, where the red man was a rarity and a curiosity.
The Healy and Bigelow company, of New Haven and New York, decided to test the box office value of the Indian and augment their already showy rather elaborate medicine show with a wild west act. Pawnee Bill was commissioned to gather together a large company of Indians and fetch them to Philadelphia. When he arrived in the Pennsylvania metropolis Tony Harrison was with him.
Titus Moore at first had been doubtful about it, but a few words from Craig had covered him.
"All of a sudden he swung right in line with the idea," Tony informed Pawnee Bill. "I don't know that came over him to make him change his mind."
The other smiled. He could explain it very easily. He was thinking, but he chose not to.
Tony's chief regret at leaving the Bar K arose with the necessity of parting with Cherokee, his horse. The son of Black Diamond and Fancy was a beautiful spirited thing and the boy was his slave. Titus Moore himself had to promise to look after him.
"Don't worry, Tony. I'm as proud of him as you are. The first son-of-a-gun that looks at him cross-eyed I'll personally scalp."

Pawnee Bill's recommendation had obtained for Tony a job as a cowboy in the wild west show. The boy was the best horseman in the outfit and he could handle a rope as well as the most of them. As for Tony's sponsor, the long-haired Indian interpreter was quite the most picturesque figure, red or white, with the show. He and Tony roomed together and wherever they walked through the streets of Philadelphia people stopped to gaze after the broad-shouldered figure with the flowing mane and the wide hat.
"That's showmanship," he informed the youth, when questioned as to whether it was not embarrassing to be the object of so much curiosity. "I don't mind it and it increases my value to the show."
He had in mind, he said, going into the business for himself some day. "I'm studying costs and trying to profit by my experience. I won't be working for other people very long. If they can make money off me I ought to be able to make it for myself if I keep my eyes open."
That evening Pawnee Bill was not to be found when Tony looked for him after the performance. He waited, for it was their custom to go to a restaurant for something to eat and then walk together through downtown Philadelphia before going to bed.
A ticket seller saw him waiting and called to him. "You're just too late," he laughed. "I saw Pawnee Bill waiting off with a pretty gal. You're sure? He didn't say anything to me about having a date."
"I saw him with my own eyes," Tony laughed and walked off and promptly forgot about it. Later that night Pawnee Bill explained.
"I met a nice little girl, Tony, a little beauty. She came to the show with some friends and somehow we got to talking and I took her home. I guess I made a fool of myself."
"How's that?"
"Why, her mother and father came in the morning and talked to me and I don't know what to talk about. They're Quaker people, I think, and sort of sedate, and they kept looking at me as if I was a curiosity."
Tony laughed. "I thought you didn't mind that sort of thing."
"I don't, as a rule, but this was kind of different. Besides, I forgot myself and spit on the floor and the old man sort of raised his eyebrows at me. Of course," he hastened to add before Tony could speak, "I know I don't right to spit on people's floors in a nice house like that, but I got fused and there wasn't any cuspidor around and so I let her go without thinking."
"That's sure too bad," Tony complained. "I'll just bet you haven't got the nerve to go back again now."

"In that so?" the other retorted defiantly. "Well she's coming to the show again tomorrow night and I'm walking home with her again. What do you think of that?"
"I'm not saying a word. My advice to you is to sit near a window."
The girl's name, it developed, was Mary Emma Manning. She's just 16, but pretty as a picture. Black hair and brown eyes and—
"Sure, I know. Well, give me an invitation to the wedding." He grinned and ducked quickly to avoid one of Pawnee Bill's boots. From the door he called back, "If she's got a good looking sister you might take me along with you. I'm getting right starved for romance myself," and gathered from Pawnee Bill's retort that he would find a welcome in a hotter climate.
His own thoughts later that night were not so facetious. He couldn't help thinking of Rita, wondering how she still rode around and get in everybody's way? He was masking his interest behind a tone of indifference.
Craig shoved back his hat and scratched his head. "Well, yes. She still runs things; in that respect she hasn't changed much."
"Does she talk the same?"
Craig regarded him with an amused stare. "Well, she snickered a Virginia accent, I guess you'd call it. Sort of soft and lazy-like. And she don't say ain't no more. What else do you want to know?"
Tony reddened furiously. "Nothing, I reckon. I—I was just figuring that two years might make a powerful change in a girl and I was curious."
His heart kept pounding against his ribs as they rode along. What would she be like? Would she be the old, careless, impudent Rita, the Rita that used to issue commands like an imperious little queen? Or would she be another person—reversed, dignified, conscious of her place and of his?

(To Be Continued)

Rita Moore has changed, Tony learns, and it adds nothing to his peace of mind.
