(Associated Press Leased Wire)
WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Another act of humanitarianism has been placed to the credit of the army air corps for rushing a supply of serum from Manila to Bacolod in an attempt to save the life of a young Spaniard dying from gangrene infection.
A sugar company, whose field superintendent had been cut with a bolo by a native and who was in a dying condition, appealed to army headquarters at Manila to send a supply of serum by air to Bacolod, two or three days away by boat. Within 24 hours, two amphibian planes were on their way with a flight surgeon and medicine. The planes reached Bacolod in five hours. The flight surgeon was rushed to the hospital where he found the young Spaniard surrounded by his friends and a priest administering the last rites. The room was cleared and the patient treated with the serum. At last reports, hopes were entertained for his recovery.
