And everybody, in almost every circle, sees the change. New beauty, new health, new vitality. Each box of Marmola contains the formula, also the scientific reasons for results. Jan Millionaire Gives Longevity Recipe

Write Humorous Poem Daily, Don't Invite Worry by Borrowing Money, Sleep Plenty.

TOYKO, Feb. 23.—The way to live long is to compose a humorous verse each day, eat only four-fifths of what you want and never borrow money, according to Kihachiro Okura, retired Japanese millionaire who lately celebrated his ninety-second birthday and was decorated by the emperor.

Okura, who was formerly a baron but who has transferred the title to his eldest son, told interviewers that the writing of a humorous verse daily is the most important factor in attaining that tranquillity which makes for health and longevity. He declined, however, to submit any of his verses for publication.

The aged magnate has seen four emperors ascend the throne. He has seen the time when life insurance companies in Japan were not on speaking terms with foreigners. He remembers when "shaly barbarians" from the west were put to the sword on the slightest provocation.

Only a few years ago Okura, on one of his anniversaries, told a curious public that he attributed his good health and long years to the daily eating of eels and rice. At the age of 92, though, after considering his stomach reactions carefully, he has decided that eels and rice are not so good as a regular diet for a nonagenarian. Consequently he indulges in eels only now and then.

He still believes in plenty of sleep and no worry. The only way to keep from worrying, he says, is not to borrow money.

JUDGE REFUSES TO ISSUE INJUNCTION

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 23.—Circuit Judge Walter Evans today refused to issue an injunction against the board of regents of the University of Oregon in a test suit to prevent them from proceeding with construction of dormitories and student buildings on the campus at Eugene, as provided in a bill passed by the last legislature.

Marion McClain brought the suit as a taxpayer, claiming that the erection of buildings on the campus would incur liabilities on the part of the state in excess of those provided by the act.

The bill which was passed by the legislature gives the regents of both the University of Oregon and the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis the power to provide dormitories, boarding facilities, housing and buildings for student activities.

The board of regents of the University of Oregon prepared to proceed with a building program, there being over 300 students in need of such facilities. The cost was not to exceed $400,000, the amount eventually to be made up through the return of rentals on
