ROSEBURG, OREGON, FRIDAY, MARCH 23, 1928.

A NEW BRIDGE EARLY; NEW ROAD WHEN?

A satisfactory solution of the problem of financing the projected bridge across the Umpqua river at Scottsburg seems to have been found at last, judging from proceedings of the county court yesterday, which were based upon suggestions of the super road district involved, backed by the Roseburg Chamber of Commerce and understood to have the approval of the state highway commission. Apportionment of the total cost of approximately $157,000 in equal amounts between the road district, the county and the state, as originally determined upon, is not changed, but according to the new plan worked out the state will not participate in the monetary side of the project until the time arrives for meeting the cost of the proposed Drain-Reedsport highway, of which the bridge will be a unit. The road district and the county are to advance the money to defray the cost of the bridge, about $78,500 each, instead of something like $52,334, which would have been their share if the state had contributed now on the three-way basis. The difference between those two amounts, $26,166, is the approximate sum that will be credited to each, however, under the three-way plan that will meet the cost of the highway, whenever the state finds itself able to proceed with its construction. At least this is the assurance under which the court decided to put up half the money required for the bridge. Just when the state will begin work on the road, nobody seems to know. The state highway commission announced some time ago that all future road projects of any magnitude, not previously authorized, were to be held in abeyance pending the outcome of the popular vote on the proposed $3 automobile license law. It was made plain by the commission that enactment of such a law would slash its working capital so deeply that the state-aid road program would have to be materially reduced. The future of the Drain-Reedsport road project is therefore uncertain. That the road will be built eventually cannot be doubted, but the outcome of the next state election will determine the date. However, construction of the bridge alone will be more than justified by its facilitation of heavy traffic, so greatly handicapped at present by the slow, tedious system of ferrying. It is a matter of equal general satisfaction that the county can meet its share of the cost in the convenient way of drawing on its market road money in 1929, instead of resorting to the originally proposed alternative of borrowing from the fund set aside for the liquidation of general indebtedness bonds.

MARKETING OUR TURKEYS

Wide and long-established reputation for excellence of quality will no longer alone sell Umpqua valley turkeys at a high profit. Strong and increasing competition from other parts of Oregon and also from Texas and Idaho call for systematic marketing as well as careful grading. This information comes from H. B. Cosby, poultry specialist at the Oregon State college, who spoke this week at the forum luncheon in Roseburg. Referring to the abundance of turkeys now raised in Oregon, Mr. Cosby stated that "if Douglas county did not produce a single turkey this year, the effect would not be felt upon the market." He also warned the growers that lack of proper grading and marketing on part of a few shippers could be disastrous to the industry as a whole. The necessity for giving serious consideration to Mr. Cosby's remarks is at once obvious. One naturally arrives at the question of whether or not cooperation among the turkey growers of the Umpqua valley has become imperative. An affirmative answer appears to have been given by one county grower at the meeting, who pointed out that an Idaho turkey pool last year brought higher prices to the producers than the Umpqua valley output marketed in independent batches at the same time. If cooperation is to be the ultimate and final plan, if the turkeys must be pooled to assure standardization and satisfactory profits, now is the time to make arrangements toward that end. There should not be delay in action, as was the case with prune and broccoli growers, until competitors have been given an opportunity to establish preferential demands in the markets and to do such marketing ahead of us on a co-operative basis.

FORMER TREASURER OF DEMOCRATIC NAT. COMMITTEE CALLED

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

CHICAGO, Mar. 23.—Wilbur W. Marsh, of Waterloo, Iowa, former treasurer of the democratic national committee, went to the federal building here today and accepted service of a summons to testify before the federal grand jury in New York.

Marsh was enroute home from Washington where he testified before the senatorial Teapot Dome investigating committee.

The subpoena served today directed that Marsh appear in New York with all records of contributions to the democratic national committee from August 16, 1918, to March 12, 1921.

His testimony was desired in connection with an investigation of possible violation of the federal internal revenue law.

"The two major political parties are not crooked," he said, "though there are some crooks in any party."

The subpoena was "forthwith." It was served on Marsh at his home with income tax returns of some who contributed to the democratic fund.

AWAITING ARRIVAL OF BARKER'S FATHER

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

MEDFORD, Ore., Mar. 23.—There were no new developments today in the disappearance and suicide of George W. Barker, president and cashier of the First Bank of Butte Falls. Concluding investigation and settlement of the affairs of the bank by the state banking examiners, await the arrival Saturday of the father, W. H. Barker.

Worry is generally assigned as the cause of the capitalist ending his own life with a pistol, after disappearing Monday afternoon. The dead man, at various times was engaged in the banking business in Bellingham, Seattle, Astoria and San Francisco. He was a track athlete at Leland Stanford University and attended the University of Oregon one term.

SENATOR FERRIS OF MICHIGAN A DEATH VICTIM

The single wedge that could elevate the Republican rock that had withstood democratic assaults for three score and ten years.

Pappy in Old Age
"When I entered the race," Senator Ferris said afterward, "I had not the faintest hope of being elected. I felt that on a miracle could win for me. However, I entered the campaign with all my strength, and decided to fight to the last ditch."

One of the points raised by republicans against Mr. Ferris' election was his age, and this drew a prompt and characteristic reply from him. "If age is a physical condition as to be feared in the campaign," he said, "I'll put on the boxing gloves with Mr. Townsend any time he wants to start."

A log cabin on a wooded farm near Spencer, Toga county, New York, was Mr. Ferris' birthplace, January 6, 1852. It was a time, as he later said, when sewing machines and kerosene lamps were luxuries.

Young Ferris' early years were filled with hard work and schooling. The education was carried on, he said, with a degree of regularity the "desert storms and ordinary ailments." The first eight years of attending school he described as "the horror of my life." Yet he lived to become the founder of a school that has more than 20,000 graduates in the United States.

Was Well Educated
When he was 14 years of age the future United States senator entered Spencer Union Academy and from this point on his educational progress was rapid. There followed alternate periods of student life and teaching at rural schools. At Oswego Normal Mr. Ferris met Helen Frances Gillespie to whom he was married December 23, 1874, and a week later Mr. Ferris and his bride began teaching at the Spencer Academy. A year later they moved to Illinois and established the Freeport Business College at Freeport, Ill.

There followed years of varying success in educational work, including five years during which Mr. Ferris was superintendent of schools at Pittsfield, Ill. They moved to Big Rapids, Mich., in 1884 and established Ferris Industrial School—later Ferris Institute. The growth of the school from two small buildings to a $100,000 institution was gradual, but sure.

Mrs. Ferris taught for many years at the institute, withdrawing in 1901. She died March 23, 1917. Three sons were born to them, one of whom lived but a few months.

Mr. Ferris married Miss Mary Ethel McCloud of Indianapolis August 14, 1921.

LANSING, Mich., Mar. 23.—The death today of Senator Woodbridge N. Ferris, removed from Michigan Democracy a picturesque figure, long recognized as its most powerful leader and was regarded in political circles as a distinct loss to the party, despite the senator's recent announcement of his intention to retire from active political life.

His death places upon Governor Fred W. Green, a Republican, the task of choosing from among his personal and political friends in appointing a successor, who will serve until the November election.

Senator Ferris' term would have expired next March 4, and at the November election a successor to serve until that date as well as for the full term thereafter, will be elected.

Although the governor was non-committal as to whom he might appoint the name of Joseph W. Fordney, former congressman, was brought sharply to the fore by those close to the governor. They professed to know that Mr. Fordney would be offered the interim appointment. Fordney, they said, has no desire to return to Washington for a lengthy period and would step aside at the completion of the interim appointment and allow those who wish to contest for the Republican nomination and election next November to go into the battle without being forced to compete with an appointed senator.

Among potential candidates in the fall election who also are friends of the governor, are Arthur H. Vandenberg, Grand Rapids publisher and Albert E. Sleeper, of Bad Axe, former governor.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 23.—The death of Senator Ferris, of Michigan, will give the Republicans one more vote in the senate, making the lineup there 48 Republicans, 45 Democrats, one Farmer-Labor, with two vacancies.

The Republican gain of one vote will come about when an appointment by Governor Green of a successor to Senator Ferris, Democrat Governor Green is a Republican, and is expected to appoint a Republican to the vacancy to serve until the November election.

The two other vacancies are in the seats for Illinois and Pennsylvania to which Frank L. Smith and William S. Vare have laid claim.

quently any person who has all other qualifications of a voter, that is, a person of legal age and having had sufficient period of residence in the state and ward, is entitled to vote.

Neither is registration required. As a person votes his or her name is entered in a poll book furnished to the judges of the election, and any interested person has the right to challenge the vote of any person whose vote might not be thought legal and that person must prove his right to vote. Registration is required for a state election, but is not necessary for city or school elections.

Polling Places
The voters in Ward 1 will vote at the Court House; Ward 2 will vote at the Junior High School; Ward 3 at the Roseburg Hotel, and Ward 4 at the City Hall.

The city charter describes the boundaries of the wards as follows:

Ward No. 1—Beginning at the north end of Jackson St., thence south on Jackson street to Oak street, thence easterly along the center line of Oak street and the prolongation of Oak street until it intersects with the east boundary line of the city thence north along the east boundary line of the city to the south bank of Deer Creek, thence easterly along the south bank of Deer Creek to the east boundary of Kinney's Improved Plat, thence north along the east boundary of Kinney's Improved Plat to the northeast corner thereof, thence west to the place of beginning.

Ward No. 2—Beginning at the north end of Jackson street, thence south on Jackson street to Lane street, thence west on Lane street to the south bank of Deer Creek, across said river and following the city boundary to the place of beginning.

Ward No. 3—Beginning at the South Umpqua river at the west end of Lane street, thence east on Lane street to Stephens street, thence south on Stephens street to the city limits, thence following the city limits to the South Umpqua river, thence following the river and city limits northerly to the place of beginning.

Ward No. 4—Beginning at the city limits at the south end of Stephens street, if extended, thence north on Stephens street to Lane street, thence east on Lane street to Jackson street, thence north on Jackson street to Oak street, thence east on Oak street and in a straight line to the city limits, thence south and west along the city limits to the place of beginning.

Time Polls Open
The polls will be open from 9 a. m. until 6 p. m. with one hour off at noon if so desired. As some of the polls may be closed during the noon hour, it is urged by the Legion post that employers give their employees sufficient time off to go to the polls to vote.

Duty of All to Vote
This is an important project and one in which every voter within the city should be sufficiently interested to take occasion to cast a ballot. Some people have been heard to say that there is sufficient sentiment favoring the project and that therefore there is no need to vote, but even should there be such a sentiment the project can never be carried if those who favor it stay at home while those who are opposed all vote.

It is always the case that the opposition is in fact while those favoring a project do not show their full strength. It is not believed that there is any great amount of opposition to the airport, yet there is no denying the fact that there is some, just as there is always opposition to any project that is for advancement. Because of this fact voters favoring the project should be sure to vote, for it is certain that those who are opposed will not neglect the opportunity.

"ADAM AND EVE" GIVEN A DIVORCE

(Associated Press Leased Wire)

PORTLAND, Ore., Mar. 23.—Divorce today reversed nuptial ties of Mrs. Lena Mae Dunn and Lowell Dunn, who began their married life a few years ago with an "Adam and Eve" honeymoon. Mrs. Dunn, who as a bride, lived about two years in the wilds of Washington state in a costume of furs while her husband speared salmon and hunted game, was granted a divorce on a showing that her husband was too much addicted to liquor. He was ordered to pay her $40 a month alimony.

THE TINYMITES

STORY BY HAI COCHRAN—PICTURES BY KNICK

"For goodness sake, who is to blame," said Coppy. "I think it's a shame to keep those cookies all locked up. Perhaps they'd like to play. If I was sure no one would care, I'd let them out into the air." The baker said, "Go right ahead. If you can find a way."

You see we keep them locked up tight because we always fear they might go running 'round and be no good. If through some trick, you set them free, they'll be as happy as can be, but try and make them all behave, and do just as they should."

And then the baker said, "I'm due to bake a chocolate cake or two. I'll have to leave you for a while. Be good while I am gone." He waved his hand and walked away. Then Clowey jumped and yelled, "Hurray! Let's try and free the cookies so they'll scamper on the lawn."

"A good idea," someone then cried. "We'd surely like to come outside." Atop the locked up cookie cack a little cookie stood. "Please get a ladder, quick," it cried, "and down it we will gladly slide. We'll play with you and act real nice, if you will be so good."

A little ladder soon was found and Clowey stood it on the ground. "Oh, look, it reaches," he exclaimed. "That was a happy bunch." And as it leaned against the top, the cookies all began to hop out of the little cookie jar, a very tickled bunch.

Some of them very bravely tried to slide right down the ladder's side, while others seemed more timid, and then walked down rather slow. Then, when they all were on the ground, the little Tinymites gathered 'round, and Clowey world if he had cared to take the trouble," sends his diamonds by airplane from the middle of Africa to be cut in Holland and sold in London.

The human race has done a good deal since this century started. Yet, when it started, chemists said they knew about all they could ever hope to know. Science generally thought it had reached the top, and the great Wallace, who discovered evolution with Darwin, in his "Man's Place in the Universe," decided that intelligence exists only on this little earth. Some of the really great cosmic intelligences would laugh at that, if cosmic intelligence ever laughs.

Ninety representatives, only one senator, accepted Colonel Lindbergh's invitation to fly and see how safe it is. Representatives are younger. The older senators know they will soon have to take a long upward flight, with no return ticket, and are willing to wait for that.

With the latest invention, the flying pilot, looking at a dial controlled by radio, realizes instantly any deviation from the true course mapped out. That instrument, with another telling the plane's height above ground, will make fops of no consequence, apart from possible collision.

The flyer will go through them as easily as a locomotive engineer goes through a dark tunnel.

The violence of the quake also was emphasized by Pedro Sanchez, chief of the geographical section of the department of agriculture, who said that the city's mummy subsoil, acting like a cushion, saved the capital from destruction.

Despite the power of the quake and the fact that it covered 12 states, press dispatches showed only two persons were killed and less than a score injured.
