It's Lawful in Maine to Travel to Church—State Attorney General Renders Opinion on "Reasonableness" of Sunday Statute.

WALKING OR RIDING TO CHURCH ON SUNDAY IS PERFECTLY LEGAL IN MAINE, THE ATTORNEY GENERAL HOLDS, BASED HIS CONCLUSION UPON AN INTERPRETATION OF THE WORD "NECESSARY" AS IT APPEARS IN THE STATUTE.

Various other activities are legal, too, he holds, in a statement made to Rev. Frederick W. Smith, secretary of the Maine Civic League, who asked for an interpretation of the law.

Among the activities one may engage in, Attorney General Foster says, are walking to the surf, barbering, going to the store for a prescription in case of sickness, operation of trains and street cars, fishing, furnishing food and refreshment, provision of heat, water and electric light, and hauling fruits to market to prevent spoilage. All fall under the heading of "necessary."

VERY MODERN—"How do you like your new neighbors?" "Great—they're the coldest, most unfriendly people you ever saw."—Life.

GRAVE NOT UNMARKED—In a recent issue of the News-Review attention was called to the removal of the grave of Aaron Rose, the founder of Roseburg, the matter having been brought before the city council. In commenting upon the situation the News-Review stated that if a monument is needed at the grave that the city should provide one in recognition of what Mr. Rose did for this city during his lifetime.
