When A Girl Loves

BY RUTH DENY GROWS

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

Virginia Brewster, after losing both father and wealth, consents to make her home with Clarissa Dean and her father. Dean plots to separate her from her fiancé, Nathaniel Dean, but falls and later is forced to pay blackmail to a Mrs. Farley or face a scandal. Clarissa becomes jealous of her and Virginia resolves to leave, but Dean insists that she marry him.

When she refuses, he threatens to reveal the fact that her father cheated him out of $100,000 in a bootlegging deal. Recklessly, she promises to earn enough to repay him in one year or marry him.

Virginia leaves but has to pawn a ring to tide over until she can find a position. She goes to Niel's studio but her joy at seeing him is clouded because she dare not reveal her promise to Dean, and also because of the familiarity with which his model, Chiri, treats Niel.

She seeks work through an agency but without success. One evening she finds orchids at her hotel from Dean and wonders how he learned her address. Coming home from dining out with Niel one night, Virginia notices a man whom she has suspected of shadowing her for several days.

A call from the agency brings hope, but when she goes there she is advised to accept help from friends or marry. Virginia believes that Dean has bribed the agency not to help her get work. She goes to other agencies but word leaks out to the papers that the "Brewster girl" is job-seeking and she is besieged by reporters.

Now GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXX

Virginia recognized the man instantly. It was the same figure she had seen step hastily back into the shadows when she and Nathaniel were taking a taxi cab from the Russian restaurant, and now she knew where she had first seen him.

He was the man on the bus! The man whose behavior had puzzled her. She remembered how silent he had come down the steps in her wake on that occasion, how he had slipped quickly away when she had changed to turn and find him directly behind her.

And now here he was. Virginia was certain he had not been invited. "He's spying on me," she told herself furiously, back in her room. Her fury was not for the man who had shadowed her, however. It burned hot against the person she believed had employed him.

"So that's how he knew where to send the orchids!" she cried, thinking of Frederick Dean. "And he was the one who went to Mrs. Phelps. I'm sure of it!"

She was glad that she had not attempted to find a position under an assumed name. If Frederick Dean had set himself to hound her, or interfere, he could have made it very unpleasant for her in that case. As it was she had an answer. She was fighting, face to the world, and she vowed silently that never, no matter what the outcome, should Frederick Dean hear her whisper.

Later she was to be even better pleased because the newspaper stories brought her many opportunities that otherwise would not have come to her.

First of all, old friends came forth with offers of a home, and Virginia found great difficulty in refusing them. One by one they ceased to importune her as her "perfectly insane" firmness made itself felt and they were thus compelled to take her seriously.

Then the offers of positions of all kinds began to pour in on her and Virginia soon learned how valuable her name was. She could sell it for large sums if she wished, and in regard to one or two proposals she wondered if she should not accept.

But a consultation with Mr. Gardiner put an end to her interest in these. He warned her that unscrupulous persons could make dishonest use of the prestige that was attached to the name. Virginia's fear of this, promptly turned down all offers to pay for the use of the Brewster name.

But the estate was still unsettled and investigation had shown that most of the offers of employment that were made to her were fictions of some imaginative person's brain or else they required experience such as she did not possess.

Some of them she might have been tempted to take had they come to Viola Browne, but she felt encouraged to wait just a little longer and see if something more to her liking would not turn up. She had gone through the storm, squirmed under the spotlight, and if anything good could come from it Virginia felt entitled to hold her own. She was pretty sure of getting a job now, and although she was still living on the money she had raised at "Uncle Simon's," and her personal belongings were gradually disappearing from her room, she had received an unexpected boon as a result of the attentions of the press.

She had gone to the hotel manager and explained that she must have a cheaper room or leave the hotel. Her circumstances were fairly well known to the world at large by this time and Virginia had no need to keep up a false appearance.

The manager very graciously assured her that he could not afford to lose her patronage and Virginia was told that if she would stay and pay for her room she might appear as often as she liked in the dining room as a guest of the management.
