Plant Diseases and Insects Inflict Annual Loss of 4 Billion Dollars

WASHINGTON, June 19.—(A. P.)—Destroying from one-tenth to one-fifth of all crops, insects cause agriculture in the United States an annual loss of more than $2,000,000,000, and plant diseases are responsible for losses at least comparable.

C. C. McDonnell, federal director of insecticide, fungicide, and caustic control, by which estimates the total damage approximately four billion dollars, figures the loss to virtually nullify the labor of one million men. No satisfactory control methods yet have been discovered for some of the most destructive insect pests or for some fungus diseases. However, McDonnell says, the use of insecticides, fungicides and caustic poisons has increased until the value of manufactured products subject to government control averages close to $10,000,000 a year.

The fight against insects and fungi, he says, grows more and more important as the population increases and a larger food supply becomes necessary. As a general rule, the more closely grouped are the hosts of a parasite, the more vulnerable they are to attack. Also, improved transportation facilities tend to spread plants infested with insects or diseases from one region to another, giving a parasite or one plant a chance to become a parasite of another.

Among some of the outstanding sources of loss to the farmer, McDonnell points to the cattle grub, whose damage to the cattle industry is placed at $100,000,000 annually. Various smuts take a yearly toll of more than 100,000,000 bushels of grain, and losses due to rusts are even greater. Apple scab caused a reduction of 22,000,000 bushels in the 1925 yield, and in 1918 anthracnose and stem-end rot of watermelons caused a loss of $1,250,000 in four states. The country's annual production of commercial fruit is valued at $700,000,000, practically all of which must be protected by fungicides.

Mrs. Herbert Hoover Remembered by Home Town of Whittier, Calif., as a Leader in Girls' Activities

WHITTIER, Cal., June 19.—(A. P.)—Any resident of Whittier who lived here in the nineties can get a ready hearing nowadays with anecdotes of Lou Henry's girlhood. For Lou, now Mrs. Herbert Hoover, has become Whittier's most distinguished resident.

Whittier remembers Lou as an enthusiastic young girl in her early teens, living in this Quaker town with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry. She was the eldest daughter, and her father was cashier in the village bank.

Natural Leader

Lou, recollections of those days agree, was a natural leader and a girl who inspired loyalty. Pictures are still extant of the girl as Joan of Arc in a grammar grade tableau, garbed in heavy leather gauntlets and shining armor made of bright tin discs.

She liked outdoor sports and athletics despite the fact that exercise was considered not quite ladylike for girls, and had to be disguised under the name of "calisthenics." Her mother had a physical instructor come out from Los Angeles several times to give the girls some private lessons.

Headed Literary Club

She and her comrades had literary aspirations, too, and they formed a club for reading and discussion, of which Lou was president. They met at the Henry home on South Painter avenue once a week and it is chronicled that they started their course of study with Dickens and his Pickwick Papers.

As a girl Miss Henry was fond of hunting, and with a small rifle given to her by her father she roved the low Puente hills, near Whittier, in search of small game. She also developed a penchant for taxidermy.

Always, her neighbors of those days say, she was persistent, but extremely sympathetic and resourceful.

Sympathetic Side

One story deals with a school entertainment at which the girls gave a "drill" with fans and scarves—an exercise not to be referred to as "dancing" in a town which did not approve of dances. One little girl found the steps difficult, and the teacher spoke rather sharply to her at rehearsal. As the girls left the schoolhouse the girl was crying. Lou Henry put her arm around her and accompanied her all the way home, consoling: "Never mind, the teacher was tired and didn't mean half what she said."

Led Girl Scouts

It was no surprise to Whittier when Lou Henry Hoover, in womanhood, became the leader of the Girl Scouts.

She went from the town to attend the leading Stanford University and won the first medal in the department of education. It was there that she met and married Herbert Clark Hoover, and it is on the Stanford campus that they have their home today.

Airplanes Help Alaskan Reindeer Industry

Prospecting Company Transports Meat to Its Mining Camps; Summer Trips Planned.

SIUNGNAK, Alaska, June 19.—Alaska has found a new use for airplanes and at the same time a valuable aid in its expanding reindeer industry.

Regular transportation of reindeer meat by airplane from this small native village in northern Alaska has been started by the Army Prospecting and Developing Company of Fairbanks.

A company plane, the Arctic Prospector, was the first ever seen here and was the first to transport reindeer meat in Alaska. By a coincidence Pilot C. P. Crawford also bought the first meat sold by the Siungnak cooperative company, recently organized with the assistance of the Alaska division of the United States bureau of education.

The natives were thrown into excitement by their first sight of an airplane but experienced their greatest surprise when the chief of the Koyukuk Indians, ancient enemies of the Siungnak Eskimos, climbed from the plane for a friendly visit. For years the Eskimos had feared the Koyukuk tribe and as recently as two years ago maintained night guards to warn against any attack.

Much of the meat taken by plane from Siungnak will be sent to the Koyukuk district, 150 miles south, where the prospecting company operates mining camps. A fortnightly service is planned for the summer months.
