Old Home Town Awaits Coolidges

Northampton Folk Speculating as to Whether President Will Resume Law Practice in Former Offices When Term Expires or Become Associated With an Outside Corporation or College.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., June 23.—(A. P.)—Now that it is certain the Calvin Coolidges will be moving out of the White House next March 4, their old neighbors here are looking forward to their return to the quiet life of this New England community.

It was nine years ago that they left the modest two-family home at 21 Massachusetts street in 1919, when Mr. Coolidge became governor of Massachusetts.

During the years some of the neighbors of those days have moved away, and the young people they knew have grown so much that when Mr. Coolidge shared a hymnbook with Charlotte Crooks at Easter services recently in the Edwards Congregational church, during a visit to her mother, she did not recognize the young woman, although the Coolidge and Crooks families shared the same pew for years.

But Mr. and Mrs. Renben Hills, close friends of the Coolidges, still live but a few doors from 21 Massachusetts street, and Mr. and Mrs. George H. Spear, who once lived near the Coolidges, now reside close by in Elm street.

It will be easy enough for "Lawyer Coolidge," coming back to dwell in Northampton, to resume his custom of dropping casually into the Spears' front room of an evening, offering a brief but pleasant greeting, selecting a volume from the bookcase and spending a quiet hour reading before he bids the Spears goodnight, without having felt any uncomfortable obligation to keep up a conversation.

Speculation on Future
Until the republicans actually named another candidate, Northampton thought that Mr. Coolidge would be drafted for another term. And some still believe that the retiring president will either settle on the old family homestead at Plymouth, Vt., when he leaves office, or will go to some large city or to a college and head a large corporation or an educational institution.

But Mr. Coolidge has remarked to friends that he is looking forward to getting back to Northampton, and his associates of a decade ago will be waiting for the Coolidges with the only sort of welcome they would want. The old friends undoubtedly will give them a chance to enjoy complete privacy for awhile, until they adjust themselves. Those who do not know the family well stand a little in awe of their position, and closer friends, understanding their preference for simplicity rather than ceremony will, let the Coolidges choose their own manner of re-entry into Northampton life.

Law Firm Name Kept
If Mr. Coolidge's office on the second floor of the Masonic building still bears the firm name "Coolidge and Hemenway" on the door, and the president's former partner is entirely willing to take him back into the firm, the name of which was preserved at Mr. Coolidge's request although the partnership was dissolved when he became president.

If Calvin Coolidge becomes a Northampton lawyer again, old friends would not be surprised to see him resume his old practice of walking the mile between his office and his home two or three times a day.

Shoemaker Waiting
Whether he would stop on the way home to do the family market, as he occasionally did in the past, seems more doubtful, but Mrs. Louis Lacey, the shoemaker friend of Coolidge who treasures a letter from the White House saying: "If it were not for you, I should not be here," is sure Lawyer Coolidge would drop into his little shop on Gothic street once in a while.

The Coolidges never were fond of playing bridge while they lived here. Mr. Coolidge spent some of his vacations hunting woodchucks in Vermont, and devoted a little time to improving his marksmanship at the national guard rifle range in Florence as a member of the Northampton Rod and Gun club. Mr. Coolidge often used to play a part in "neighborhood sing." It is recalled by Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. Campbell, and Mrs. Coolidge sometimes played the piano for the singers.

Before his marriage to Grace Goodhue, then a teacher in the Clarke School for the Deaf, Mr. Coolidge occasionally sat in friends' recall, at a game of cards with other young lawyers in a modest club room, but the games were all for fun.

If the Coolidges return, only a slight change need be made in the Northampton city directory, which now lists the distinguished couple thus:

"Coolidge, Calvin (Grace A.) pres. of the United States and lawyer (Coolidge & Hemenway) 25 Main, b. 21 Massachusetts."

to $10.50; cows up to $9.15; bulk she - stock, medium and lower grades, $8.75 down; low cutters down to $5.50; bulls mostly $7.90 to $12.00; better grades vealers mostly $12.00 to $14.00; calves $13.50 down; heaves and thins down to $7.50 and below.

Some first consignments of Mt. Adams lambs Wednesday and Friday brought $13.50 and $13.25 respectively, yearlings and aged stock practically absent. Best yearlings quoted nominally up to $8.50 and best light ewes up to $5.50.

Official quotations at the North Portland yards this morning were steady and unchanged at yesterday's figures.

PORTLAND, June 23.—Egg prices took another jump upward yesterday, advancing from 1 cent per dozen on medium frills to 2 cents per dozen on standard extras. Standard frills advanced a cent, while medium extras rose 15 cents per dozen. Light receipts, insufficient to active demand, were responsible for the price advance.

Butter values were steady and unchanged.

Trading was fairly active on country dressed meats and poultry markets but prices were steady at yesterday's quotations.

All classes of early fruits were more plentiful on wholesale produce markets this morning and prices were generally easier.

Berry prices were steady to firm with strawberries averaging about 25 cents per crate higher than yesterday at $1.75 to $2.00 on account of week-end demand. Raspberries and loganberries were easier, reflecting heavier supplies.

Old potatoes continued to move well at steady prices. New potatoes were easier, top best white rose offerings being around $2.50 per sack.

With five holes yet to play, the title was a toss up.

STOCKHOLDERS FEDERAL LAND BANK MEETING

bank was started as a war-time measure. There was a foreign and domestic demand for food and some emergency measure had to be provided to meet it. As a result there was outlined the federal land bank system. It was entirely new system, untried, without precedent and with no experience. The officers were chosen largely through political effort, rather than upon a basis of personal fitness, and while many of the men proved to be well qualified for the offices in which they were placed, many, on the other hand, chosen only for political reasons, were not as well qualified.

The time, too, was inauspicious. Farm values were at their very apex. Mr. Shepherd produced some startling figures regarding farm land depreciations during recent years. Farm values in the state of Washington, he reported, have decreased over $242,000,000 in the past few years, while Oregon values have dropped $105,000,000, Idaho $228,000,000 and Montana $249,000,000, making a total depreciation of $942,000,000. The depreciation figured on a basis of percentage, he said, amounts to about 33.13 per cent.

Applying this to farm loans shows one of the chief handicaps the bank has been forced to face, he declared. Based on a valuation of $1,000 when farm lands were at their peak they would now be worth about $667. The bank was privileged to loan 50 per cent, which at the time of high value would amount to $500. If it became necessary to foreclose the additional costs would bring the bank's costs to $768, or more than the actual valuation of the property.

Reducing his figures to a basis of individual farms Mr. Shepherd said that the average depreciation in the state of Washington was $3,472 per farm, $1,581 per farm in Oregon, $5,493 in Idaho and $6,675 in Montana.

The most surprising feature, Mr. Shepherd said, is the fact that the land bank exists at all in the face of the fact that the bulk of its loans were placed before this depreciation in land values occurred.

"It is conclusive proof," he told his listeners, "that the land bank is founded upon sound principles and that it is on a permanent basis. If such were not the case then the bank could not have gone on during these hard times facing the handicaps that it has been called upon to meet."

Appraisals Handicap
Mr. Shepherd also pointed out another problem that has worked against the bank. When the system was first instituted it was looked upon purely as a government enterprise. The people throughout the country gained the idea, he said, that as long as the government was putting up the money that the thing to do was to grab as much as possible. This led to appraisements far greater than the loan value of the land, a policy that is still practiced, he reported, by many of the local boards. This made necessary drastic cuts by the federal appraisers, so that the entire procedure worked to cheapen the standing of the bank and to belittle its operations.

He called attention to the fact that the bank is owned by its stockholders. While initial capital was furnished by the government the bank is now owned and controlled entirely by its stockholders, who are the borrowers of its funds, the organization being a cooperative, originally financed and sponsored by the government but now entirely within the control of the farmers themselves. Therefore, he said, it is to the interest of the stockholders to see that the bank is operated on sound business principles.

Other speakers at today's meeting were A. S. Goss, director at large; H. C. Venables, adjutant, and Hugh Sproat, divisional director.

Mr. Frank Binns, of Shelton, Washington, president of the association of stockholders, presided over the meeting.

The afternoon was given over to a round-table discussion of matters relating to the work of the bank and local problems and difficulties.

This series of district conventions is being held by the officers of the association and of the bank for the purpose of helping the stockholders gain a more comprehensive idea of the operation of the federal land banking system, its benefits, methods of operation, and policies. It is hoped to further inculcate the idea of cooperative ownership with a view of strengthening the position of the institution in order to secure closer cooperation.

The conference today is for the stockholders of all of the southern Oregon associations and there are a large number of out of town visitors present for the meetings which are being held at the Moore hall. There was a very fair attendance for the morning sessions.

BULL KILLS UNION COUNTY SCHOOL BOY
LA GRANDE, June 23.—Wilfred Stoddard, captain of the La Grande high basketball team, last winter, was killed about one o'clock this afternoon when he was gored by an angry bull. The death occurred on the Stoddard farm near here. The boy was shoved against a corral, breaking his neck.
