BLACKSMITH, 100, STAYS AT FORGE

(Associated Press Licensed Wire)
OSY, France, June 28.—The blacksmith is still a mighty man in this village, although he recently celebrated his one hundredth anniversary. He took off his leather apron and left his anvil and forge long enough to take part in a town fête organized in honor of his birthday and the bestowal on him of the gold medal of merit which France awards to its faithful aged craftsmen.

Monsieur Pica works every day, and all day long, in his smithy. For several generations the men of his family have made horse-shoes and mended plowshares in time of peace, and repaired swords and side arms or carried them in time of war.

When A Girl Loves

© 1928 by NEA Service RUTH DEWY GROVES

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Virginia Brewster is in love with Nathaniel Dunn, but she is tricked into promising to marry Frederick Dean in one year if she fails to earn $100,000 that he alleges her father cheated him out of. Brewster had lost his fortune before his death and Virginia is left destitute.

She pawns her jewelry and Oliver Cutter promises to invest the money for her. She seeks work without success, and discovers that Dean has bribed the agency not to help her. Oliver gains her confidence and shows her attention which Niel resents, but she does not like the way his mother, Chiri, treats him.

Virginia finally obtains a position she likes. Shortly after she is charged by Cutter's wife with trying to alienate his affections. She appeals to him to explain, and demands an accounting of her investment. He confesses that he has not made a penny for her, but says that he will give her any amount if she will go away with him. She denounces him and leaves his office.

Her firm requests her to go on a voyage as ship hostess. This separation, together with the Cutter affair on one hand and Chiri on the other, causes a lover's quarrel between her and Niel which is not mended before Virginia sails.

She and Niel both suffer, but her work and the hope of getting aid from a friend of her father, J. D. Leigh, in Haiti, help her endure the heartache.

Arriving at Haiti, she goes out to the home of Leigh but finds the plantation terribly run down. Leigh is quite ill, and Virginia comes away in despair when she realizes that he is in no position to help her raise the hundred thousand.

Now GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XLIX
Virginia was sadly disappointed. Nathaniel's letter had told her nothing of his feeling for her. It lacked tenderness.

It was entirely in the nature of the repressed conversations that had usurped their old, free exchange of confidences after Niel's discovery of her association with Oliver.

He hoped, and Virginia failed to see, that it was ironical, that she was having a fine time.

He spoke of his work, nothing definite. The bad weather she was lucky enough to escape. The artist's bull and, near the end, "Chiri's peach. Been a little off my appetite but she keeps me going with stuff she says I ought to have. I think I used to misjudge her. Remember the time we talked about the seaweed and the quicksand? I'm beginning to believe we were both wrong and that the kid's full of gold-dust."

Virginia finished the letter, and she had not written to him. She could not write in the vein he had employed. Silence would help to maintain the impression that she was growing, indifferent toward him. For these reasons she had stifled her longing to reach him by mail.

He could ascertain easily enough when the arena was due to arrive if he wished to know, she consoled herself when she thought of the welcome homecoming she was inviting. But she did not expect to see him at the pier.

She was long in leaving the ship, having remained to speed her "guests," and to receive their expressions of gratitude for pleasant voyage.

Suddenly a pair of arms opened out before her and she walked blindly into them. They closed about her, held her with their face pressed tight against a rough overcoat while Nathaniel confessed his joy of having her back.

Happiness surged over Virginia like an ether that wiped out everything but this great, indescribable relief of being with Niel again.

But trouble does not vanish until it is conquered. Nathaniel knew nothing of Virginia's momentarily overwhelming joy. He only knew that she broke from his embrace before he was ready to release her, and looked at him with eyes already wiped of truth.

"How good of you," she murmured. "I didn't expect you."

Nathaniel clamped his lips close, and scanned her face through narrowed eyelids for a few seconds.

"I know you didn't," he replied, with a short, rasping laugh. "But I'm such a poor fool that I came anyhow."

"Coming up to my hotel?" she asked indifferently.

"No, I'm not," he growled. "I've had enough. But I'll take a taxi with you, and drop off at the studio."

He was furious with himself because he could not resist lingering in her company.

He had come because he could not keep away. He had meant to greet her with no more warmth than she herself displayed.

He'd take his cue from her. Her silence had proved her love was gone, but he wanted additional proof. That everything was at an end between them now was incontrovertible.

He wanted to turn on his heel and walk away. And he hadn't been able to do it. He took some pride in his refusal to accompany her to her hotel, but it hardly made up for his weakening enough to go as far as his studio.

Virginia was nixed in a strange mixture of emotions. She was elated one moment because his love had endured despite her casting him to the spell of her rival, and depressed the next because she could not reveal her elation to him.

No matter now what he said or did she would know that he loved her. That one moment when he held her in his arms with unrestrained fervor betrayed him. He was her man, her man!

Her heart sang the words in a paean of enchanted ecstasy. But so accustomed had she become to living one character in her heart and another for the world to see that Nathaniel never heard the song, or even suspected its existence.

To him she was just a cold, indifferent, uninterested girl whom he had kissed against her will. They rode to his studio in a silence that was broken only by an occasional remark from one or the other. Nathaniel did not invite her to enter, though Virginia both hoped and feared that he would do so.

She drove away with a little nod through the door he had closed behind him—a door he had closed with a feeling of having stepped forever from a paradise to which there is no re-entering.

Heartless, cold, unreal—call her what he would, he loved her. Disrespect, hate, contempt, all had faded when he sought to use them to tear her out of his heart.

Her face was sweet, her voice and body lovely. Nathaniel despised himself because they enthralled him, but he had not succeeded in loosening the leash that bound him to her.

It was impossible really to believe what he knew of her. Virginia grieved deeply for him as the taxi cab carried her up town. And she grieved for the lost hours they might have shared together.

In spite of all she had done to protect him from the final hurt he would experience when he learned she was going to marry another man, he must go through the ordeal just the same.

His pain would not be softened by the weeks of her absence. The cruise had been a needless, a useless sacrifice all around.

Virginia obtained her key at the desk, exchanged greetings with the hotel attaches whom she met, and went to her room with the knowledge that she had made a mistake.

She might as well have lived her year of life to the fullest—the cost would be the same.

She had not started to get herself settled, her things unpacked and put away, before there was a rap on her door and she opened it to see Chiri Mond standing in the hall.

"I know I'm rushing you," the girl said before Virginia could recover from her surprise sufficiently to speak. "But I wanted to talk to you before you saw Niel."

Virginia stepped back and held the door open for her to enter.

Chiri came in, pulled off her hat, tossed it onto the bed, rubbed up her shaggy bob and settled herself in the only comfortable chair in the room before she said another word. Then she asked for a cigarette.

"I'm sorry," Virginia said. "I haven't any."

"You wouldn't," the other returned. "Well, I won't be able to get it across quite so well without a smoke, but I think it's for the good of all hands to have it out."

She crossed her knees and threw herself back in the chair while she regarded Virginia with a set grin.

Virginia poised herself on the edge of the bed, near the end, and leaned on the footboard.

She knew intuitively that Chiri had not come here at this hour for any light purpose. It must concern Niel. They had nothing else in common.

Virginia decided not to tell her that she already had given him the sealed bids will be received by the Looking Glass school board, Dist.
