LOVE FOR TWO

RUTH DEWEY GROVES © NEA Service

Bertie Lou Ward, on the eve of her wedding to Rod Bryer, feels a premonition of trouble when she receives a dagger-like paper knife from Lila Marsh, who has turned Rod down because he is not wealthy. But she courageously resolves not to be jealous of Rod's past love affair since his future is in her keeping.

Bertie Lou receives another blow to her pride when she accidentally overhears one bridesmaid ask another if she thought the bride liked being second choice. But the pain vanishes when Rod whispers "My wife" with a world of adoration in his eyes.

They spend an ideal honeymoon in a mountain resort, and Bertie Lou forgets the shadow cast by the ex-wedding until they return and find Lila acting as dictator in their apartment because she "knows what Rod likes."

The newlyweds settle down in their little home, but entertainment and the demands of hospitality deplete their finances. Bertie Lou is worried both about her budget and Lila's persistent annoyance. So she urges Rod to accept a position in New York which has been offered him by an old friend, Tom Fraser.

But the serpent is not cast out of their Eden yet, for just as they are saying farewell to friends at the station, Lila announces her intention of seeing them soon in New York, for she is going to visit GO ON WITH THE STORY

Bertie Lou's newly-found sense of security vanished instantly on Lila's words. "I might have known it," she wailed inwardly. But her audible answer was quite different. "We'll tell New York you're coming," she said with the smiling sarcasm that had characterized their conversation since her marriage. Lila hastily turned her back.

"Watch out for those little wild flowers growing on the old cow path," she warned Rod. "Broadway's outgrown its age of innocence, they say."

"And don't buy the Brooklyn Bridge. They're going to build a bigger one across the Hudson," he heard. Tommy White shouted after him as he followed Bertie Lou to the Pullman platform.

They stood there, waving goodbye until a bend in the road turned them from a last view of their friends. Then they staggered and bumped their way through the vestibule to their section. Bertie Lou sank down on the green plush seat with a tired sigh.

"There were soft violet shadows around her eyes to testify to the physical and emotional strain of giving up the flat.

Leaving it had not saddened

New York. But what if they weren't? It had been Lila's parading of her memories that had given Bertie Lou more heart burning than any real fear of losing Rod's affection. There wouldn't be an audience for that in New York.

Security came back to Bertie Lou in the contact of Rod's arm. In his cheek laid over on her head. She relaxed against him more comfortably and reached up to pull off her hat.

Rod rubbed his cheek on her hair. "Soft as corn silk," he thought, with never-failing delight in her daintiness.

Bertie Lou glanced over at the opposite section. It was unoccupied, so she cuddled up closer to Rod and they talked away all their unexpressed fears. Each buoyed up the other and by the time dinner was called they were building a castle somewhere in the city and having no difficulty whatsoever in its construction.

"I guess we've got our big chance all right," Rod was saying when the waiter came through.

"Let's celebrate with a good dinner," Bertie Lou suggested. "I'm starved. And maybe you think it won't be a treat to eat something someone else has cooked!"

Suddenly, at table, Rod said: "Say, Bertie Lou, did you ask Molly about a hotel in New York?"

"Of course not," Bertie Lou replied emphatically. "What would she think of us? Everyone knows the names of the best hotels there."

Rod paused over cutting off a bit of roast chicken. "Don't you think we'd better find a cheaper one?" he asked, a little anxiously.

Bertie Lou frowned slightly. "We've got to make a good impression on the Frasers," she said impatiently.

"I don't see why. What would be the use trying to run a bluff on Tom?"

"It isn't a question of running a bluff," Bertie Lou told him, lowering her voice so the couple at the next table could not hear. "It's a matter of standards. What you choose for yourself is the measure other people will have of you. You expect to get a raise some day, don't you?"

She stopped and waited. Rod nodded. "Well, if Tom sees that you're the sort of man who demands a lot out of life he'll know he has to give it to you or lose you."

"But I'm not worth anything to him," Rod expostulated.

"You will be," Bertie Lou answered shortly. "We'll go to a first class hotel."

"And save money just like we did in Wayville?"

"Don't be sarcastic, please. We'll find an apartment in a day or so. But Tom and Molly will always remember that we aren't hicks. It's smart, you know, to go to a good hotel. It won't break us to stay at one for just a couple of days and you couldn't have a better investment."

Rod gave in. Molly lifted her eyebrows in a surprise when Bertie Lou telephoned and gave her the name of their hotel. Molly was not a Wayville girl. She hadn't understood from Tom that either Bertie Lou or Rod's family was well to do. But she supposed that must be the case. She told Bertie Lou very cordially that she would be over within an hour.

Bertie Lou was waiting for her downstairs. After all, it might be just as well if Molly didn't see their room, she thought. Somehow it didn't quite come up to the glory of the lobby. The rates were high, higher than she'd expected.

"I suppose you want to rush right over to Fifth Avenue and get some clothes," Molly gurgled, after one glance at Bertie Lou's costume.

Bertie Lou became suddenly conscious of her summer apparel. Molly was wearing a Fall suit and a fox fur.

"I'm dying to go shopping," she confessed; "but Rod wants to get settled as soon as possible. I think I'd better find an apartment so we can send for our furniture before I spend any time on myself."

Molly assumed a superior air. "But my dear," she began, "you can't go about New York in a summer outfit at this time of year. You'd make a wrong impression wherever you went. And of course you want to look at apartments on the upper East Side."

Bertie Lou gathered from her tone that the upper East Side was a part of town in which it was not desirable to make wrong impressions. But a doubt of the wisdom she'd been so sure of on the train assailed her. It looked as if one could err on the side of making impressions that were too good. If rentals in the upper East Side were anything like the rentals of this hotel, she said nonchalantly. "We rather think we'll try to live within Rod's income."

"Then you'd better go up to the Bronx unless you want to live in a cupboard," Molly advised. "But in any case you've got to have some clothes. I'll take you to my favorite shop."

Bertie Lou felt sick. If she refused Molly might guess that she preferred to wait and look around for the best values. It would look cheap after the gesture they'd made in the selection of a hotel.

Maybe I could spare time to pick up a sports coat," she said after a little quick thinking. Sports coats ought to be fairly inexpensive in any shop.

"By the way," she exclaimed as they moved toward the door, "Lila says she's coming to visit you."

The words came lightly but Bertie Lou waited nervously for the answer. The idea that Lila

N. Y. SOCIALISTS DEMAND PROBE OF WALKER REGIME

(Associated Press Licensed Wire)

NEW YORK, July 17.—An investigation of Mayor Walker's administration is asked in a petition to Governor Smith by the state executive committee of the Socialist party which charges "municipal misrule and political corruption."

Eleven specific accusations are made, including alleged graft in sewer construction in Queensborough; payroll padding in the street cleaning department; alleged monopolies in the sale of the city of supplies, in which William F. Kenney, friend of the governor, is mentioned; and the expenditure of $200,000 for the reception of "so-called distinguished guests."

The petition was filed in accordance with instructions from the socialist state convention at Albany on Sunday.

"To look to Mayor Walker to correct any of these grievances would be a waste of time," it says. "The mayor has assiduously spent his time, which belongs to the city, by granting parties, visiting race tracks and in general earning for himself the title of the 'absentee mayor.'"

"To guard against any white wash," the petition demands that representatives of the socialist, democratic and republican parties be appointed to the investigating commission.
