LOVE FOR TWO

RUTH DEWEY GROVES © 1928 by NEA Service

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Bertie Lou Ward marries Rod Blyer, who had previously been engaged to Lila Marsh. The latter amuses herself by telling her friends that she was Rod's first love, and continues to make life miserable for the bride until she meets a rich Mr. Loree and marries him. Then she asks Bertie Lou to forgive the past.

Trying to keep up socially with wealthy friends plunges the Blyers in debt and Rod becomes depressed. Lila seizes her chance to persuade him to accept a higher salary from Loree.

Shortly after, she asks Rod to put some jewels in the safe during her husband's absence. The jewels disappear, and Rod wants to notify the police, but Lila insists that they keep the matter secret, pointing out that suspicion against him might spoil his career. Bertie Lou finds out that he has been seeing Lila secretly and is heartbroken.

She is called home to her sick mother, and has to catch a train without seeing Rod. The separation, added to Lila's plotting, causes a coldness to spring up between them.

Bertie Lou returns on the eve of their first anniversary to find Rod apparently indifferent. Each expects the other to make advances. Rod goes to the Lorees without her, and Bertie Lou goes out with Marco Palmer to retaliate.

Coming home, Marco kisses her unexpectedly at the door and Rod sees it. He offers Bertie Lou a divorce, and she counters with the same offer to him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXI
"I'm glad you're awake," Rod remarked as Bertie Lou looked indignantly at him from her lacy pillows. He came over and sat at the foot of the bed to talk to her.

Rod was struck by Bertie Lou's haggard appearance. "Better go easy on the night life," he said. "You look like the devil."

"Is that all you came in here to tell me?" Bertie Lou flamed. "She was angry with herself for having fallen down so soon on the role of base indifference she wanted to assume."

"No, but I don't think it's out of order to warn you," Rod replied. "You will need your strength for housework after this. We won't be able to keep a maid."

Bertie Lou's delicate eyebrows came together in a quick frown. Rod had never explained why he suddenly cut her allowance in half. And now she was not to have a maid.

"You don't expect me to take care of this apartment alone, do you?" she asked, more as a leading question than was meant to draw out further information than because she felt unequal to doing the work if necessary.

"No, I don't," Rod assured her. "But we won't be here after the first. I'd have suited the place before this if I'd found a tenant. But most people who can afford an apartment like this leave town for the summer," he added explanation.

Bertie Lou's brow cleared. "Are you taking a country place?" she asked.

"We're moving back where we were before we got high hat and came in here," Rod informed her shortly.

Bertie Lou could not repress an ejaculation of surprise. "Have you lost your position?" she asked, thinking that matters might have come to a crisis with him and Lila.

"No, I haven't, but I'm going to save some money if it's the last thing I do," Rod said decisively. "You can go and look at the apartment I've taken—it's smaller than the one we had—and see how much of this furniture we'll need. But I wish you would send back the things that aren't paid for."

"You've had all spring and most of the summer to pay for them!" Bertie Lou cried. "I'd like to know what you've done with your money. You certainly haven't given yourself writer's cramp sending checks to me!"

Rod felt tempted to tell her then and there why he was putting half of his salary aside. The real reason Lila had given him for withholding news of the theft of the necklace and bracelets from Bertie Lou seemed to have lost their importance. But others had taken their place. Bertie Lou might rebel against his paying the amount of insurance Lila had carried on them.

That thought in his mind showed clearly Lila's subtle influence. At one time he'd have banked as strongly on Bertie Lou's desire to do the right thing, even if it appeared quixotic, as on his own willingness to meet his obligations. But now he was not sure.

She had been extravagant, heedless of his wish for a home of their own, and finally she had cooled his love by her neglect of him while she was away.

Had Rod asked himself why she had been neglectful he must have admitted that she hardly would have been so without reason. It had come so suddenly, her coolness. But when it first became apparent to him that she had changed he was too perplexed about it to judge intelligently.

Now he had no desire to examine her motives. She had, with or without reason, ceased to love him. Rod was thankful for it now. It saved him from a life of hypocrisy to keep her happy. But along with the departure of their love had fled much of Rod's faith in Bertie Lou's good qualities.

No, he concluded, he'd better not tell her about the theft if he wanted to save his money for Lila without having a lot of trouble over it.

"I've told you I'm saving," he said quietly, "but not to pay for gimcracks from Park Avenue decorators."

Bertie Lou regarded him through narrowed eyelids. She saw that he was firmly set in what he intended to do. But she would not give in meekly.

"I won't send back a thing," she said stubbornly. "If we're going back to live in that hole I'll take some decent furniture."

Rod stood up. "Do as you please," he said, "but you'll have to pay for it out of your household money."

Bertie Lou found as the summer wore into fall, that he had meant just what he said. She was hard pressed to meet the payments on the $400 radio and the costly "gimcracks" she had purchased under Lila's guidance.

She began to think Rod was mean. He simply would not give her even a hint of his reason for lightening up the payments. If Bertie Lou suggested a show, he said he'd prefer the movies. And they never went out on a party together any more.

Bertie Lou found many excuses for avoiding Lila. Rod still went often to the Lorees and Lila finally was driven to pretend to Cyrus that she and Bertie Lou had quarreled.

While Cyrus said nothing, it was his opinion that Rod was not exactly loyal to his wife. But then, he reflected, Rod might be thinking of his job. And besides, if Lila was right, Bertie Lou had turned out to be a giddy flapper wife. She was hitting a pretty fast pace with young Marco Palmer and his crowd, Lila had told him.

It was true. Bertie Lou became tired of doling her own household work, of counting pennies while Rod saved a lot of money each week and wouldn't tell her what he was for. She could think of several uses he might have for it—and did. One of them was concerned with Lila and made Bertie Lou turn hot and cold with anger and dread.

Her hands were getting rough and reddened from peeling potatoes—they had them often because they were filling—and washing dishes. And she hated to answer the doorbell. Nobody came so often as the collectors.

But the thing that started her on an excess of mad pleasure seeking was the humiliation she felt over Rod's frequent visits to the Lorees without her. To Bertie Lou it was ample proof of his willingness to live "each in our own way," as he had said the night she came home with Marco Palmer.

For a while she had refused to go out with Marco again, but he that the inevitable hour might be long postponed.

She told Rod, quietly enough, that whenever she wanted to leave him she would do so. He would, she hoped, have no hesitancy about doing the same.

It was ghastly. Two beautiful young lives bound together with tender ties, calmly placed on a basis that was equivalent to a day-to-day endurance test.

Bertie Lou could not stand it. She threw herself into a very orgy of dissipation—dissipation of time, of beauty and of health. Sleep became practically a stranger to her and she discovered nerves that she had not known she possessed.

Rod rarely found her at home now—rarely saw her. There were no more meals in the apartment. Bertie Lou once offered to cut her household allowance, but Rod grimly refused. He was eating in cheap restaurants and cafeterias.

Bertie Lou applied the money he refused on the debts he was paying off. He protested when he learned of it, but she would not talk about it.

The strain of their artificial relations began wearing on Rod. He came home one day to dress for one of Lila's dinners, and saw with a mixture of relief and consternation that Bertie Lou was packing her suitcase.

DRUM CORPS PARADES TO ADVERTISE DANCE

The Saturday night dances sponsored by Umpqua Post of the American Legion at Umpqua park have been well advertised through the activities of the drum corps.

Last Friday night the drum corps paraded the street and also gave a concert at the camp grounds. Money from the dances is being used to finance the corps on out-of-town appearances and to keep up and add to the equipment. The size of the drum corps is being increased to 28 pieces, and new stunts are being planned for the coming year. The members of the drum corps are Roy Campbell, Virgil Bush, Adam Flurry, George Caskey, Fred Brown, Alvin Knudsen, Simon Van Voorst, Ralph Karcher, Harley Watson, Chas. O'Malley, Willard Johnson, Edw. Raynor, E. A. Post, Paul Caskey, Harry McCaskey, W. W. Stone, Claire Pettit, Ned Dixon, L. I. Proctor, Robert Mathews, Sylvan Barager, Joan Hicks.
