FLED TO SHIELD MOTHER, CLAIM OF NORTHCOTT

prised not to find me armed to the teeth as they said about poor little mother," he remarked with a trace of bitterness. "Reading all these stories about myself has certainly given me a lot of amusement."

Then he continued with his denial of the charges and the reason for his flight.

Pursuers Easily Eluded

On his way to Vancouver Northcott took great delight in telling train officials how he had eluded capture several times.

On Monday after his trail was lost at the Pendrell street rooming house in Vancouver, he drove to Blaine, Wash., intending to recover his automobile, which was in the hands of customs authorities there.

He used a "big blue car" on this trip, he said, but according to Col. H. G. McMullin, head of the British Columbia police, he was driving a light car.

Twice on Monday night, while he was believed to be still in Vancouver, he crossed and recrossed the international boundary at Blaine.

On the first occasion, he said, after reaching the U. S. side he found himself fourth or fifth in a line of automobiles. He noticed other motorists being searched and their effects examined. Realizing that inspection of his papers or baggage in the automobile would reveal his identity he felt that capture was imminent.

But luck and his own resourcefulness saved him. He noticed a woman accompanied by two children, struggling with several suitcases. Alighting from his car he hurried to assist her and while he was thus engaged the customs and immigration men missed him.

Northcott chuckled at the memory of the incident.

Hide and Seek Played

For a reason he did not divulge he turned back to the Canadian side after this narrow escape, but again entered the U. S., a short time later. Again he felt it wisher to return to Canada.

Early Tuesday the hunted man and his mother were driving north from Vancouver. They reached Lillooet, sped through the marble canyon, passed Ashcroft and reached Spence's bridge Tuesday afternoon.

As told by Northcott this was a wild ride. "I was not accustomed to the car," he said, "and it had no brakes. Descending hills I put it in reverse, but that did not do much good either. All the time my baggage, plainly marked with my initials, was in the car."

At Spence's bridge he put his mother on the train to Calgary and drove to a point near Princeton. He left the car on the track five miles out of the town and hid his baggage in a bush.

From Princeton he took a train to West Summerland, and there embarked on the steamship Sicamous, which he thought was bound for Sicamous. This last "leg" of his trip led him into the hands of the police.

Criticizes Newspapers

Northcott discoursed on a variety of subjects. He had decided views on newspapers.

"The newspapers, especially those in the south," he said, "convict a man before he comes to trial. I do not think there should be so much publicity about crimes before the man charged with them comes to court. I don't blame the newspapers so much. They are in a competitive business. But I do blame the administration that permits the practice." The Hickman case was cited to him as example of his contention.

"Oh, that was different," he said. "Hickman deserved all he got."

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 21.—Search for Mrs. Winifred Clark, who was last seen in the company of her mother, Mrs. Sarah Louisa Northcott, and her brother, Gordon Stuart Northcott, ended today with the report to Assistant Walter Owen, provincial police, Vancouver, from Chief of Police Ritchie, Calgary, that Mrs. Clark has been located in Calgary.
