CONTINUATION OF ADMINISTRATION IS DECLARED NEEDED

BOSTON, Sept. 29.—President Coolidge in a message read at the republican state convention here today said that the country needed "a continuation of the administration of public affairs in accordance with the principles which have guided the achievements of the republican party."

"This need," the president wrote, "should be fulfilled by beginning the next political year under the tried and experienced leadership of Frank G. Allen and Benjamin Loring Young in our commonwealth and Herbert Hoover and Charles Curtis in our nation."

Allen, now lieutenant governor, was named at the primary on September 15 as the republican candidate for governor and Young for United States senator.

The president's message addressed to Francis Prescott, chairman of the republican state committee, was as follows:

"Although it seems a long time since I have attended a republican state convention in Massachusetts, my interest in the purposes for which they assemble has not diminished but rather increased and was never greater than in the present campaign."

"Its membership represents an organization with a long history of important achievements in the field of sound government which have carried incalculable benefits into every home. Our country needs the continuation of the administration of public affairs in accordance with the principles which secured these results. These needs should be fulfilled by beginning the next political year under the tried and experienced leadership of Frank G. Allen and Benjamin Loring Young in our commonwealth and of Herbert Hoover and Charles Curtis in our nation."

"To our convention assembled for the accomplishment of these interests I send my cordial greetings."

WHIRLWIND

THIS HAS HAPPENED

Sybil Thorne, bride of two weeks, has deserted her husband in Havana. Richard Eustis, facing a marriage of convenience, has been married. He doesn't want to have anything to do with that wicked man. And besides—

It would be terrible to bring a child into the world with a heritage like that.

"Richard Eustis was drunk almost every blessed minute if she's going to have a baby, everybody will know about her marriage. And they'd know she had run away from her husband. Oh, it would be so dreadful!"

Mabel sighed miserably. Then a thought, like lightning, flashed across her mind.

"Heavens above!" she groaned. "It would be worse than that. They'd never believe Sybil had been married at all."

Doctor Henderson twirled his thumbs upon his little round stomach.

"And how," he asked, "did you think I could help you?"

Mabel explained. "But you see I may be making a mountain out of a mole-hill. But she's perfectly miserable. She hasn't been able to eat a thing since we came aboard. Do you suppose, Doctor, that she is going to have a baby?"

Thoughtfully the little physician gazed upon the ocean.

"Well, now, that's a very difficult thing to say—at this stage of the game. There are no hard and fast rules for the condition you contemplate. None at all—unfortunately."

"In any case, I should advise that you keep your misgivings from her. Divert her mind. Get her out on deck if you can."

"Would you be willing to drop in and see her, Doctor?"

"I wouldn't do a particle of good, my dear young lady."

That night Sybil slept fitfully. Mabel never closed her eyes.

The dreadful uncertainty of it! In four days they would be with Craig and the family. Mabel pounded her pillow fiercely and moaned in silent misery.

"Of all the horrible complications!"

The next morning Sybil went to breakfast in the salon. But it was the last time she essayed it. She had lunch and dinner brought to her on deck, and announced her intention that evening of having all her meals in her deck chair.

"It's really much pleasanter," she said. "It's so stuffy in the dining room."

Use that she spent most of her time in the open, even sleeping one hot night on the boat deck. And so the days passed, lazily and pleasantly enough, until the journey home was over.

They were getting in in the afternoon. Sybil, in a deck chair, watched an apple meditatively.

"Well, Mab," she confided, "I've made up my mind what I'm going to do. I'm not going to say one single word about Richard to anybody."

"If Craig still wants to marry me, after the shameful way I've treated him, I'm going to wait until I'm altogether sure of myself. Then, if I know I want to marry him—and, oh, my dear, I do—sure this time—I'll make a clean breast of everything. Perhaps it will kill Craig's love, but I guess that would be my punishment."

"As if you hadn't had enough now!" interrupted Mabel.

"Life's all just a wait for me. I don't exactly have a bed of roses for any of us, you know. Makes you wonder what it's all about, doesn't it? Life's so hollow—it seems as if there ought to be something good somewhere."

"Well, I'll have my little heaven. If I ever patch things up with Craig, if he cares enough, Mab, I could get a divorce after a while."

"Of course you could, dear. What did I say?"

"Well, there wouldn't be any sense in it, if it wasn't going to do some good. Do you suppose Craig will want me, Mab—when he knows?"

"Oh, I'm sure he will, Sib. I think real love can forgive most anything."

"But I couldn't forgive Rich."

"Of course you couldn't. That was different. He insulted you—outraged you—oh, my dear, there isn't any comparison at all."

"Perhaps Craig will think I treated him as horribly as Rich treated me. In a way there's a sort of parallel."

"There isn't, Sib. Craig will understand."

Mabel tried to sound confident, but her heart was full of misgivings. Suppose Craig did love Sybil, just the same. Suppose he did want to marry her. But suppose Sybil was going to have a baby—Richard's baby. How would Craig feel about that? And how about Richard? It would be his baby, too. Mightn't he want it?

That was a new idea. Mabel pondered it silently. Perhaps Sybil would let him have it. If she didn't love Rich, perhaps she wouldn't love the baby—his baby.

Sybil interrupted her train of thought.

"Mab, I was talking with the captain yesterday," she demanded. "He says that all life is accidental, and that everything is chance. He had the thing pretty well doped. I think I rather agree with him."

"Take me for instance, I'm sure Mother was satisfied enough with Ted before I ever came along. All my life I've thought she half regretted me."

"Sybil!" Mabel's laughing protest was rather shocked.

"Well, I have," insisted Sybil. "Might as well be frank about it. Now suppose you forget your outraged sensibilities for a minute, Mab, and listen to me."

BORAH DEFENDS HERBERT HOOVER

(Associated Press Los Angeles Wire)

MITCHELL, S. Dak., Sept. 29.—Senator W. E. Borah of Idaho, in an address here late yesterday defended Herbert Hoover against charges that he is unfriendly to the American farmer.

"Never was grosser libel ever circulated in a campaign," Borah declared.

The senator discussed farm relief, prohibition, deflation and the Underwood tariff. The Underwood tariff, Borah said, placed the farmer at the mercy of peon labor all over the world.

Questioned by persons in the audience regarding Hoover's arguments with the packers after the war, Borah declared that "had Hoover been wastefully extravagant in his dealings with packers, I would a million times rather support him than the grand leader and chief of Tammany Hall, the most corrupt political organization in the world."

Prohibition, Borah declared, was being dragged into the campaign over the heads of the platform makers of both the democratic and republican conventions by that corrupt political organization, Tammany Hall.

He asserted that the 18th amendment must be kept on the statute books and that if it is to be kept there "the women of America must realize the prohibition fight is their fight."
