Ladies Aid Enjoys Christmas Party At Church

Quite a delightful affair of the week was the party which had Christmas as its motif and at which the Ladies Aid of the Christian church, entertained in the social rooms of the church on Thursday afternoon. At one o'clock a luncheon was served downstairs. A setting of holiday colors made the room and tables quite attractive. Later the group went to the social rooms where a Christmas tree was arranged for an exchange of presents.

Devotional services were held there and later the time was spent informally. Mrs. Glenn Radaugh entertained with a group of two delightful readings. About thirty members attended the affair.

Metzger and the second prizes went to Mrs. Ed Vothberg and Ben Jones. At the close of the evening a committee of hostesses served refreshments.

Business Women's Dinner Last Eve

Owing to illness of many of the members of the Business and Professional Women's Club the meeting planned for last night was not well attended as expected. The club met at Brand's Stand, north of the city for dinner, held in the fruit room, which was attractive and arranged for the affair.

Following the dinner the evening was spent socially, the business being held over until the next meeting date.

Christmas Party Entertains Club Group

Quite a delightful social affair of the week among club groups was the annual Christmas party of the Past Matrons Club, the members being invited to the home of Mrs. Albert Abraham for the evening on Tuesday. Informality marked the entertainment and an exchange of gifts was made. Later the hostess, assisted by her daughter, Miss Dorothea Abraham, served refreshments.

MOVIES

Colleen Moore in "Oh Kay" at Antlers Sunday, Monday

A strong cast of comedians support Colleen Moore in "Oh Kay." Ann Hale, Ford Sterling and others in roster of players.

With a cast including several of the most talented comedians known to the screen, "Oh Kay," Colleen Moore's hilarious farce opens tomorrow at the Antlers theatre for a run of two days.

Vivacious Colleen leads the cast in the stellar role of "Kay," her entertaining personality being ideally suited for the character of the independent young English girl who portrays. Such laughable pictures as "Naughty But Nice," "Her Wild Oat," "Etc., Etc.," "It Must Be Love" and "Orchids and Crime" have established Miss Moore as the screen's outstanding comedienne, and in "Oh Kay" she is said to attain new heights of humor.

Reginald Denny in New Comedy at Liberty Sunday

In one of the fastest fun frolics screened in many months, Reginald Denny's latest and most rollicking comedy is coming to the Liberty theatre Sunday. It is "The Night Bird."

The story is exceptionally novel and deals with the private life of a prize fighter with enough actual fighting thrown in to thrill the most jaded movie palate. The fighter is shy of all femininity but his manager demands that he attend parties to help the box-office at his fights. He is immediately set upon by two "Love Pirates" and befriends a little immigrant girl—whereupon extremely hilarious complications ensue.

An attractive little newcomer plays opposite Denny in the person of Betsy Lee, a petite brunette with sparkling brown eyes.

The "Love Pirates" of the Artists' Quarter are played with humorous abandon by Corliss Palmer and Jocelyn Lee. The prizefighter manager is portrayed by Sam Hardy with his usual breeziness. In the supporting cast also are Harvey Clark, Machel Viscoroff, Alphonse Mariel and George Bookasta.

Self-Consciousness Spoils Smooth, Graceful Walk

One's walk should be the embodiment of grace, says Doris Niles.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a series of six articles on "How to Graciously Walk," written exclusively for NEA Service and The News-Review by Doris Niles, youngest American dancer to head her own ballet organization.

BF DORIS NILES For NEA Service

One of the best examples of grace in walking is Queen Victoria of Spain. I have seen her cross a lawn before an immense throng of people whose eyes were fastened on her every movement. That was an ordeal. And yet she seemed to float rather than to "walk." The result was the very embodiment of natural queenly grace.

How did she accomplish it? Simply by applying the principles of the old-fashioned waltz. She stepped on her heel and the balance was carried slowly forward to the toe. There was no jerking, no sagging. Even though the queen was not as lovely a woman as she is, that walk of hers would raise prices to catch their breath in admiration.

There are three ways taught to dancers in the studio, follow the waltz, the foxtrot and the tango. There is nothing wrong with any of them, but the waltz is the only one that is both graceful and dignified. The most important rule in walking is to relax the muscles. Instead of being stiff and awkward, the body should be as supple as a cat, just as in the old-fashioned waltz, stepping first on the flat of the foot, then on the toe.

To paraphrase an old saying, when self-consciousness comes in at the door, grace flies out of the window. Many a girl who is naturally a graceful walker, if faced by a gazing multitude, would be overcome with fear and timidity. Consequently, she would walk in an ungainly way of which at any other time she would be utterly incapable.

There is one reliable and only way to avoid such experiences—know the why and wherefore of the proper way to do things. When one is certain of the right way, one does them unconsciously even when, in the first moments of an unusual experience, the mind is fluttering from nervousness. A noted French authority transferred his pupils on just this plan for appearing on the concert stage. He had them rehearse over and over what they would do in coming out before the public and in the moment when nerves, affecting the calm working of the mind, would interfere—in other words, when they were self-conscious. Therefore, when surprise or a trying emergency came, they were to follow grounded in the right way of doing things that they did them instinctively until the mind worked normally.
