CHICAGO COLD KILLS

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—One man was found dead and two more seriously frozen as Chicago and vicinity shivered in the grip of near zero weather which reached its coldest stage at 8 a. m. today. The temperature at that time was 2 degrees above zero.

Some of the outlying sections of the city reported unofficial temperatures of zero and 2 or 3 below.

DIPLOMAT IS BETTER

CLEVELAND, Jan. 2.—The condition of Myron T. Herrick, United States ambassador to France, who is ill with asthmatic influenza, was described as "much improved" today by Dr. John Phillips.

Last night Mr. Herrick was able to sit up in bed to read and listen to the radio.

The 74-year-old diplomat was forced to bed at his Cahgrin Falls estate about ten days ago when he suffered an attack of bronchitis. Tuesday night his condition suddenly became worse and two tanks of oxygen were sent from a hospital to the estate to be used in case of emergency. Two nurses also were put on duty at his bedside.

BEWARE THE COUGH FROM COLDS THAT HANG ON

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

MAN IN FALLING CANNOT BEAT SPEED 120 MILES PER HOUR

Two superstitions have been laid and a scientific law revised as a result of recent parachute-jumping experiments at Wilbur Wright field, the army experimental aircraft station, at Dayton, Ohio.

The superstitions, which received their deathblow when men began jumping from airplanes, were:

First, that a person falling from a high building would lose consciousness because of the great speed at which he fell, and,

Second, that, because of the same speed, he would be dead before he struck the ground.

And the scientific law which will have to be revised, at least so far as its practical application goes, is that governing the acceleration of falling bodies, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Theoretically a falling body will drop sixteen and a fraction feet the first second and attain a velocity of about thirty-three feet at the start of the second second, sixty-six feet at the start of the third, and so on as long as it continues to fall.

Actually, a man of average weight 180 pounds, including equipment—will never attain a speed of more than 120 miles an hour, regardless of how far he drops before opening his parachute.

The answer is that the theoretical law applies only to objects dropping in a vacuum, and in practical life the resistance of the air becomes so great as speed increases that there is a limiting velocity beyond which an object of given weight and size cannot pass.

Mankind went along for generations believing the two superstitions about unconsciousness and death resulting from long falls, and accepting the law of acceleration, with some vague corrections to allow for wind resistance. It took the invention of the airplane and the parachute to correct them.

The superstitions received their deathblow when Lieut. Harold R. Harris, the first man to make an emergency parachute jump from a disabled plane, dropped 2,000 feet through the air and still was conscious enough to pull the rip-cord ring of his chute and come safely down to earth. Lieutenant Harris wasn't deliberately trying to disprove anything. With a companion in another pursuit plane, he was staging a mock fight above the Dayton field when, after a dive, his plane fell apart at 2,500 feet above the ground. Lieutenant Harris cast off his safety belt and jumped. He fell head first, tumbling through space for hundreds of feet, until his parachute finally snapped open 500 feet above the ground and brought him gently to earth.

Since Lieutenant Harris jumped, dozens of other men have purposely leaped from planes and delayed pulling the rip cord until they had fallen 1,500 to 2,000 feet. No one lost consciousness, nor did any of them die.

Because of that, the army decided to find out how fast a man might fall, or the point at which the air resistance became so great there could be no further acceleration of his falling body.

To measure the speed of a body falling from two or three thousand feet to the earth in a matter of a few seconds is a delicate operation, but the army engineers solved it by letting the falling body do the work itself. A dummy man with a parachute pack was rigged up. The outfit was the same size as a man and of the same weight, 180 pounds. To it was attached a magnesium flare, and the outfit sent aloft in a plane on a dark night.

On the ground a camera was focused, equipped with a mechanism which closed the shutter for an instant every second. The pilot of the plane went up to the desired altitude, flew along above a line of markers on the field, touched off the flare of the dummy, hanging below the ship, and after a few seconds released it.

As soon as the flare was lit, the camera began recording a line of light, broken at one-second intervals as the shutter was momentarily closed. A straight line of long dashes, which, because of the foreshortening of the perspective, appeared diagonally across the top of the plate, marked the flight of the dummy while still attached to the plane. As it was released it continued forward and downward in a curve, recorded as more dashes of light.

Next two automobiles were placed across the field, turned toward the camera, and their lights turned on. The two headlights marked the line of the horizon, and when they were connected and the line projected to one side until it met a line projected from the dashes made by the flare while the dummy was still attached to the plane, the horizons were established. From that point, it was simple to connect each of the black points between the one-second dashes with this distant horizon point and establish the distance the dummy fell in each second. A vertical line, figured according to the known height of the plane before the dummy was released, completed the measurements.

First the dummy was dropped from 2,450 feet, and it reached earth in seventeen and one-third seconds. Its maximum velocity was 175 feet a second, or 119 miles per hour. Then the dummy was taken up to 3,000 feet, and it came down in 20.8 seconds. Again the maximum velocity was 175 feet a second, or 119 miles an hour.

They tried it then from 2,900 feet, but something in the way in which it was released started the dummy tumbling over and over, and the result was it was 22 seconds coming down; a maximum velocity was attained of only 160 feet a second, and the highest speed therefore was only 109 miles.

A second dummy, weighing only 115 pounds, complete with a parachute pack, was tried from 3,200 feet, and, with its much lighter weight in proportion to size, the highest speed reached was but 85 miles an hour. For contrast, a lead weight of 200 pounds, carrying a dummy pack, was dropped from 3,600 feet, and, with its greater weight and much smaller bulk, the air resistance was so much less that it reached a speed of 206 miles an hour.

More interesting still, however, were the discoveries about the effect of the speed of the airplane on the forward speed of the dummy after it was dropped. Theoretically, according to another scientific law, if the plane is traveling 100 miles an hour the dummy will have that forward speed when it leaves the plane, and continue to move forward at the same rate while falling, with the result that when it strikes the ground, it will be directly under the position of the plane at that moment. That is true in a vacuum, but again air resistance plays an important part, as bomb droppers learned long ago. Just what part it plays, the photographic records of the tests show. Lieut. A. C. Foulk, who conducted the experiments, summed it up in his report when he said that the velocity which the airplane imparts to the dummy diminishes as the velocity due to gravity increases. If a man jumped from a plane moving 120 miles an hour, he would continue to move forward at about that speed until he opened his parachute, Lieutenant Foulk added, but if he left an airplane traveling faster than that rate, his velocity would quickly diminish to that amount.

SCARCITY SEED MAY LEAD TO HIGH PRICES NEXT YEAR

Reviewing the situation as regards the supply of grass and clover seed for planting next spring, G. C. Edler of the United States department of agriculture in a radio address through the department's regular noon-hour service over a network of 15 stations in the middle west and south, warned farmers not to delay their purchases of needed seed supplies in the hope of lower prices than now prevail.

"Farmers," said Mr. Edler, "may well expect to pay more for practically all of these seeds than they did last spring. The buying of seeds should not be put off until the last minute, and this is especially true this year."

Speaking of the general situation, the marketing specialist said the year had not been favorable for grass and clover seed. Extensive winter killing thinned stands, particularly of clover. Weather was generally unfavorable, and crops commonly below normal. Imports in many instances have been smaller, and a strong preference for alfalfa and red clover seed grown in this country has also contributed to rising prices which for all but a few kinds of seed have been higher than last year, and for some the highest in several years.

Timothy seed production, said the speaker, was 40 per cent smaller than last year, and prices though higher than last year are still lower than usual, although prices have advanced from $3 a hundred for clean seed at harvest to $4.50 recently.

Redtop, produced largely in southern Illinois, made a good crop and is moving rapidly at increasing prices. Orchard grass also is in good supply for seed and is moving comparatively slowly. But the crop of Kentucky bluegrass, so important a constituent in lawn-grass mixtures, was the smallest in 11 years and if there were not a considerable carry-over from last year, the supply would not be sufficient at any price. As it is prices to growers were nearly twice as high as last year.

Alfalfa seed supply is over a third smaller than last year. Montana was the only state reporting an important increase and Utah and Idaho, ordinarily heavy producers, had large decreases. On October 15, growers were receiving about $18.50 per 100 pounds for common and from $25 to $35 for Grimm alfalfa seed.

Winter killing affected red clover and supplies are a third less than last year, with prices advancing above last year's figures. Alsike clover was affected even more severely, and the latter part of October prices to growers averaged about $27.25 or $5.60 higher than last year. White clover is much smaller than last year, with Wisconsin far below its usual production and prices rising above last year's. Imports of white clover have been heavy, but European crops also are light.

"Sweet clover production," said Mr. Edler, "for several years has been more than keeping pace with the greatly increased demand. It is a crop that produces seed almost anywhere in this country. Reports just received indicate that frosts, rains and winds at or after harvest caused severe losses mainly through shattering, with the result that the 1928 crop in the heaviest producing districts is materially smaller than last year. The crop in Canada is reported to be much smaller than in 1927, and less seed will be available for export to the United States. Prices averaging about $5.10 a hundred are about the same as last year."
